The Glove of Gloves The Winner of the Grand Prix

The highest honors the International Exposition at San Francisco could bestow, were awarded "Niagara Maid" Silk Gloves—the glove that has no peer for richness of fabric, flattering shapeliness or long-wearing quality.

"Niagara Maid" is a glove that satisfies one's love of the beautiful and sets the seal of good style upon the whole costume. At the same time it has no rival for real glove economy.

The secret of "Niagara Maid" success lies not only in the extra care taken and in the selection of pure silk, but also in our secret process of treating the silken thread so that it gives long service and retains its rich, lustrous beauty to the last.

Double finger tips. Every pair fully guaranteed with the "Niagara Maid" trademarked ticket. Long Gloves and Short Gloves in wide assortments of colors and embroideries.

THE warm welcome won from critical motor car buyers by the Oldsmobile Light Eight De Luxe is only the natural recognition inevitably accorded tangible motor car merit. No more—no less. From time to time other cars may have appeared which seemed—in advance—fit to dispute the place and prestige of Oldsmobile Light Eight. But close comparison has invariably served rather to quicken a realization of Oldsmobile superiority. There never has been—there never will be—in the minds of most men any acceptable substitute for inimitable quality. The super-smoothness of the mighty power-flow, the incomparable charm of the distinctively designed body, the utter perfection of the most minute details in equipment and appointment—these features of the Oldsmobile Light Eight are of resistless appeal to those who seek the fullest measure of motor car service.

Those who have regarded with unconcealed doubt the complicated mechanism of many multi-cylinder motors will be highly gratified with the ideal simplicity of the Oldsmobile Light Eight. Those who have looked askance at the excessive fuel cost of many cars—defended in some quarters as a legitimate evil of multi-cylinder motors—will find further reason for Oldsmobile superiority in the fact that it averages twelve to fourteen miles per gallon of gasoline. Those who through experience have learned the disadvantages of narrow, cramped riding quarters will find the roominess of the Oldsmobile Light Eight body and the restful luxury of its wide seats and deep upholstery most pleasurable. And those who have been told that great weight is essential to strength and safety will discover in the Oldsmobile Light Eight the pleasing paradox of lightness and surpassing strength. The Oldsmobile Light Eight 5-passenger—$1195 f. o. b. Lansing. Roadster, $1195.

Our Collection of "Early Summer Models" in Gowns, Costumes, Blouses, Wraps and Millinery will be shown on and after Monday, April 17th.

Are you an assassin of joy? A dinner depresser? A bane, or a blight, at supper? Are you a conversational half portion; an intellectual side dish? If so, you should

Come to the Party!

THE STAGE: First-night and behind-the-scenes views of the newest plays—with portraits.

THE OPERA AND MUSIC: Stories and portraits of the new singers, composers, conductors and whatever is new about the old ones.

THE ARTS: Illustrated news and criticisms of pictures, architecture, books, sculpture.

HUMOR: The most original and amusing works of our young writers and artists.

PEOPLE: Striking and unusual portraits of celebrities who help make New York a brilliant, fascinating carousel.

SPORTS: An illustrated panorama of golf, tennis, football, racing, polo and a dozen other outdoor and indoor sports.

ESSAYS AND REVIEWS: By intellectually stimulating essayists and critics.

PARIS AND LONDON: The latest diverting news from the European capitals.

DANCING: Outdoor dances, indoor dances, rhythmic dances, cosmic dances.

FASHIONS: From Paris, London and New York for all discriminating men and women.

DOGS AND MOTORS: Photographs of the best-bred dogs and the best-built motors, with descriptions and timely discussions of them.

SHOPPING: An index to the best shops, what they sell, and a shopping offerthat is bound to interest alert men and women.

Do you like parties? If you do, then you should not lose a moment's time in accepting this invitation to a twelve months' party in the heart of New York. Don't miss it! Music! Singing! Theatricals! Dancing! Evening Dress! You simply MUST come to this party for sophisticated people as the guest of Vanity Fair.

Your own blood relatives won't know you!

You positively won't know yourself when you get back home after those twelve busy months in what is now the gayest capital of the world. And, which is much more to the point, your friends won't know you either. Your own blood relatives won't know you.

They'll probably think you're some visiting European crowned head in disguise. Such aplomb! Such ease of manner, such habiliments de luxe, such wide learning, such brilliant wit, such many-sided culture, and oh! such exquisite savoir faire.

Don't linger in outer darkness

We can't bear to have you remain a dweller in darkness; a soul shut off from happiness; a being languishing in personal isolation, perhaps even in social ostracism; a heart unhappily removed from the enlivening influences of the arts, graces, pleasures and refinements of life.

So just hop on to Vanity Fair's special, all-Pullman, all-anthracite, all-vestibuled buffet and drawing-room express, and come and pass twelve crowded and hectic months in New York—without leaving your own home, and without spending a penny more than the $3 necessary to pay for your round-trip ticket.

P. S.—The party is none other than a year's subscription to that most successful of all the new magazines—that monthly merrygo-round of New York life—

What ten notables say:

JACK LONDON—"It keeps me in touch with the decadent pleasures, arts, and vanities of New York!"

JOSEPH H. CHOATE— "Vanity Fair is a truly wonderful youngster!"

FRED'K MACMONNIES

"Vanity Fair is admirable.

I am proud to be represented in it."

JULIAN STREET—"You are the supreme snob among magazines. I am ashamed for liking you so much."

GOUVERNEUR MORRIS— "I have yet to miss a single page of your incomparable magazine."

CHARLES DANA GIBSON
—"I am proud of Vanity Fair's success."

WILL IRWIN—"The prettiest magazine baby ever born in New York."

GEORGE ADE—"It is evidently edited for persons who prefer orchids to tube roses. I see that discriminating people are going after Vanity Fair."

OWEN JOHNSON—"Thank Heaven for Vanity Fair in a generation of standardized magazines."

DANIEL C. FRENCH—"I like Vanity Fair's intemperate interest in art."

New York

New York

Of the ELINOR COMSTOCK SCHOOL PADEREWSKI says:

No higher tribute could be paid to any school than the endorsement of these distinguished and famous musicians.

The Elinor Comstock School is a school where intensified personal work is done, an exclusive home, where a limited number of girls, duly chaperoned, may secure a thorough musical education and enjoy the privilege of associating with many of the world's foremost artists.

Situated one block from Fifth Avenue and Central Park, the school is in one of the best residential sections of New York.

Resident and day students, beginners as well as advanced students are accepted. Single rooms are still available. Send for catalogue.

MISS ELINOR COMSTOCK
41 East 80th Street New York City

"It is my pleasant duty to tell you in writing how much I enjoyed the other day, the playing of your pupils.

All of them played technically and musically remarkably well, thus positively demonstrating the efficiency and excellence of your methods.

I congratulate you, dear Miss Comstock, upon such beautiful results of your work."

Most sincerely yours,

I. I. Paderewski

Gabrilowitsch says:

"It is with great interest that I listened to your pupils, and I am most impressed at the fine teaching they have had.

Wishing your school the success it deserves, I am,"

Ossip Gabrilowitsch.

Katharine Goodson says:

"I consider Miss Elinor Comstock one of the greatest teachers of the Leschetizky School, both as regards technique and true musicianship. During my visits to the states, I have heard several of her pupils, and was most impressed, not only with the fine ground work, but with the dynamic contrasts, excellent pedalling and beautiful tone color which they produced."

Katharine Goodson.

Theodor Leschetizky says:

"The undersigned wishes to testify that Miss Elinor Comstock has studied piano with him for two years with great success. He feels that he is able to say with certitude that Miss Elinor Comstock is well fitted to give unsurpassed instruction inasmuch as she possesses both practical as well as theoretical knowledge and with it an innate appreciation."

ity Theodor Leschetizky.

Mrs. Merrill's School for Girls, Mamaroneck-on-Sound, New York

Oaksmere offers a very complete course, covering every requirement of the young girl of today. College Preparatory, Music, Art, Diction, Domestic Science and Horticultural Courses are under the direct supervision of some of the best known specialists in the country.

That the work is done in a careful, conscientious and wholly effective way is well shown by the high results that Oaksmere has achieved. In the Finishing Department stress is laid on structural English, literature, history, the languages, and the arts, as well as on a thorough training for grace and ease of manner.

A special and quite unusual feature of the English course is the phonetic training, which enables each student to speak her mother tongue with distinct and fluent articulation, combined with purity of vowel production, a pleasing contrast to the slovenly speech and tendency to nasality prevalent among young girls. The school is situated directly on Long Island Sound. It is set in a park of ample acreage, wooded with silver birch and oak. In physical plant it comprises seven fireproof buildings, with greenhouses and dairy, chicken-runs and pigeon-cotes.

The Oaksmere spirit is the happy, congenial spirit of youth. Each pupil reflects the atmosphere in which she lives. The Oaksmere girls are a living demonstration that Oaksmere has succeeded.

Oaksmere has its own private bathing-beach, and every opportunity for outdoor exercise and athletics.

Choose Carefully

Is there anything more tragic than a boy or girl placed in an unhappy environment? Yet there are hundreds of thousands of children who perforce of financial circumstances are thus situated, and there are thousands of others in a similar predicament, not because of poverty, but because of the precipitate action of their parents in the choice of schools.

If ever there is one period in life when we should be happy, it is in our school days; for the "teens" mark the greatest development period of one's life. In these few plastic years 90 per cent. of the good, bad and indifferent people who inhabit the world are made what they are. Hence it may be justly said, that schools make or break the character.

It is to aid you in this important selection that Vogue puts before you this list of high-class schools. Every school that appears in these pages is personally known to the Vogue School Department, and while we don't for a minute claim that all the good schools in this country are grouped within the confines of these pages, we know that the schools here advertised are, in so far as it is possible for human judgment to determine, ex-

AN EPISODE AND A SEQUEL

AST year, a family in Titusville, Pennsylvania, wanted to send their daughter to a boarding school. They were out of touch with the school world and did not wish to risk the uncertainty of choosing a school which could not be personally recommended to them.

So the mother and father of the girl decided to entrust their problem to Vogue's School Directory. A letter came to our office soon afterwards, asking us to help them select a good school. We recommended several and the girl was finally placed in just the kind of a school for which her parents had been looking.

The sequel to this little episode is revealed in the following letter from the mother of the girl whom we helped last year.

HOLLY HEIMAN

The Vogue Company, Publishers of Vogue, 443-4th Avenue, New York City. RECEIVED FEB 23 1916 FEB MAIL READER

Dear Sirs:

The name Vogue is being used by merchants and manufacturers without our

authority or consent.

About a year ago a salesman who said he was representing the Yogus Hat Company of New York called on me, and sclicited an order from me for what he called "Yogus" hats.

Both from his conversation with me and from the fact that he represented the Vogue Hat Company, I got the impression that the hate which he was offering for sale were hate which were either manufactured by the publishers of Vogue magazine or in some way connected with the magazine Vogue, and it was for that reason that I purchased some hate from his Company.

After I received these "Vogue"bats, I learned from a comparison of the hate with the contents of the magazine that these "Vogue" hats were not editorially illustrated in Vogue.

editorially linewrated in Vogue.

I them wrote to you inquiring whether your Company samufactured these hats or had any connection with them, and when I learned that there was no connection whatever between your Company and the manufacturers of these "Vogue" hats, I at once discontinued their sale because I felt that to offer for sale "Yogue" hats which had no connection whatever with the sagarine Vogue would be practising deep in the public profit the sale state of the public of the public profit the sale state of the public of the public profit the sale in an undersured by:

Q. N. Phipps, Parrington & Evens, Moorhead & Jardine, Rawak, L. F. Coasile Co. whose hats are illustrated and advertised in Yogue.

MS/EE

Very truly yours,

Wally Wein are

This letter regarding a so-called "Vogue" hat should be a warning for all Vogue readers.

THE title "Vogue" has a two-fold value. First, the intrinsic value of the word itself, with its suggestion of smartness and distinction. Second and more important, the word "Vogue" has the added value of its long association with Vogue, the magazine.

Now we find that certain manufacturers are using "Vogue" as a trade-name for all kinds of miscellaneous merchandise. There are "Vogue" candies, and "Vogue" rouges, and "Vogue" hats, and various other things, good, bad and indifferent, all labeled with the title "Vogue".

It may be the desire of some of the makers of these things subtly to trade on the reputation and prestige of Vogue, the magazine. Their purpose may be to convey the idea that Vogue is in some way responsible for them.

Vogue is not responsible! Vogue has not launched out into manufacturing. If on the counter of your favorite store you find anything labeled "Vogue", do not buy it in the belief that Vogue has made it, or that Vogue recommends it.

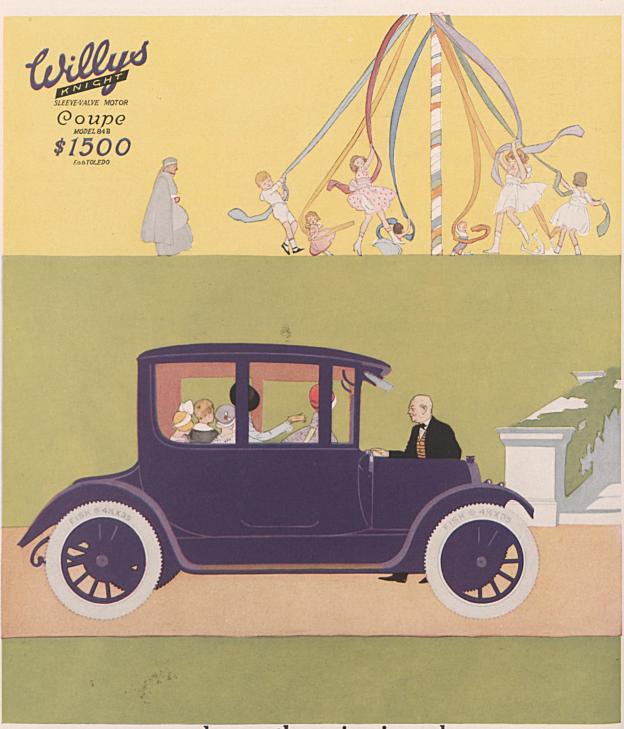

So, while we cannot prevent the promiscuous use of the name "Vogue", we can at least forestall possible disappointment on your part, should you be led to buy a product marked "Vogue" believing that The Vogue Company is its sponsor.

We believe it a part of our duty, moreover, to point out from time to time that various articles of merchandise called "Vogue" are not backed by Vogue, the magazine; and that it is not safe to accept them on the assumption that they are as desirable as the name might at first glance imply.

CONDÉ NAST,

-and now the price is so low

Almost everyone who has owned motor cars realizes that closed cars are the most practical and useful kind to own.

The few times that an open car would be more desirable are far out-balanced by the much more numerous occasions for which closed cars are the only suitable kind.

On account of their lower first cost even experienced motorists have continued to use open cars regardless of their many limitations.

But now the smart, practical, serviceable Willys-Knight closed models are produced in quantities which permit of remarkably low prices. The Willys-Knight models also overcome the one valid objection to the closed cars of a former period.

Motor and gear noises were much more noticeable in closed cars than in the open models.

But the sleeve-valve motor is practically noiseless—remains so—even grows quieter with use.

The Willys-Overland Company, Toledo, Ohio "Made in U. S. A."

and the car is so superior

And spiral bevel gears as employed in construction of Willys-Knight cars, further emphasize their quietness.

And the sleeve-valve motor not only grows quieter with use,—
It increases in power and flexibility, whereas all other types lose in these respects.

The sleeve-valve motor is practically vibrationless and far more durable than any other type yet produced.

In fact its period of greatest efficiency is reached long after any other type of motor would have outrun its usefulness.

The demand for Willys-Knight cars is growing faster than our ability to increase their production.

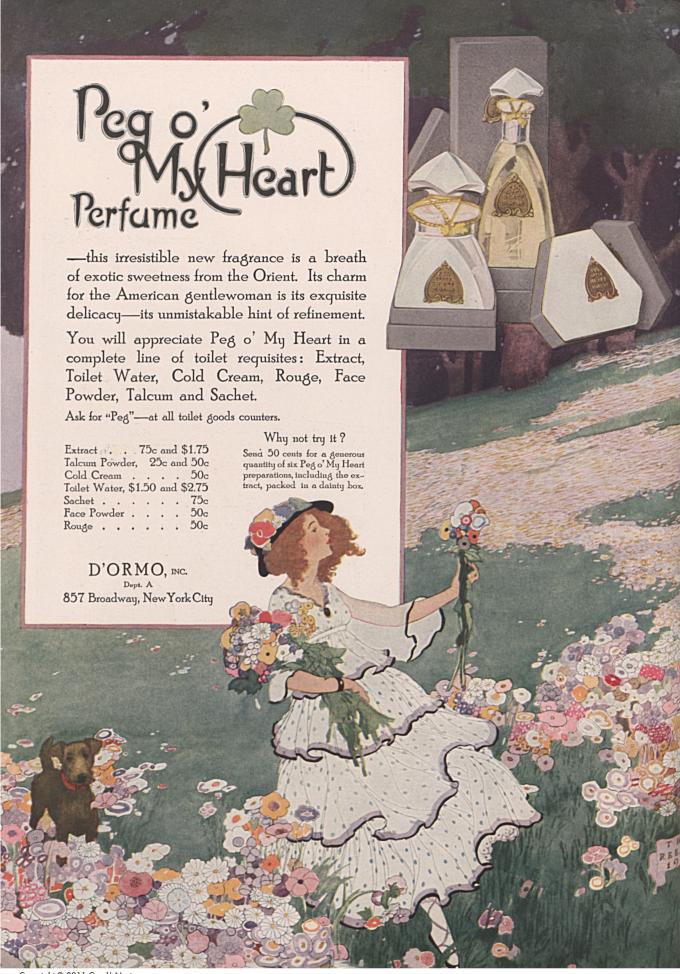

See the Overland dealer now and avoid delay by placing your order promptly.

The Limousine is $1750, the Coupe $1500.

And for those who also desire an open car there is the Touring Car $1125, and the Roadster, $1095—all prices f. o. b. Toledo.

The Next Vogue will be the Brides and Summer Homes Number

ATMOSPHERE—lots of it. And would you like to know how the bride served her outdoor wedding breakfast? Are you sufficiently interested in weddings and things, to want to know all about the latest etiquette forms—announcements, invitations and such? Will the newest veils, coiffures, trousseaux—hold anything of interest for you?

Summer homes are summer homes; you've seen no end of ordinary summer homes. We have, too. But this number contains many suggestions in color, by McQuinn, that make of the summer home a pretty, restful retreat; hammocks, lawn furniture, garden suggestions, window boxes, awnings, bird cages, aquaria. decorative bits that brighten and cheer. And then, there are designs for the garden itself—formal and informal.

In the late issues we have been showing the spring clothes; but in this, we come to the real summer designs. And perhaps the greatest feature of this issue is the display of summer lingerie. Vogue knows what are the biggest values in the shops and points them out authoritatively. Yes, this is an issue that you will certainly have to order in advance. Arrange it with your newsdealer today.

"LONG DISTANCE CALLING"

"HELLO. Is this Vogue? This is Mrs. X. of Chestnut Hill. Philadelphia. I must of Chestnut Hill, Philadelphia. I must get a governess for my little daughter at once; will you help me?"

Immediately the call was switched over to Mr. Emerson, manager of the Shoppers' & Buyers' Guide, and in two minutes more the interrogator had the names of several reliable New York Bureaus which could supply her need, -bureaus selected from the columns of the Shoppers' & Buyers' Guide.

This is a typical incident; every day dozens of people ring up Vogue and ask for all kinds of information which they could so readily find in the columns of the Shoppers' & Buyers' Guide. Of course. Mr. Emerson is always glad to accommodate-in fact, he is delighted to receive such positive proof of the confidence of Vogue readers—but what a saving it would be, financially and nervously, if Vogue readers would first of all pick up their copy of Vogue and look through the Shoppers' & Buyers' Guide!

Here are listed alphabetically and categorically, information on nearly every subject-tea-rooms and taffetas, art shops and agencies, coiffeurs and cross-stitching, laces and lotions! It is the most practical shopping guide of all time and a housewife's handbook rolled in one!

APPLYING THE RULE

DID you ever hear of the woman who, on a short trip to New York, applied a simple rule to her shopping expeditions to save enough time thereby to take in a matinee at the Metropolitan? Here is the rule:

Select your shops from those whose announcements appear on these pages. Write down their names and, opposite each one, the address and the kind of a shop it is. Thus you will know exactly where to purchase the very things you want at the best shops in New York.

THE FORMULA OF SUCCESS

WHEN a woman with a knowledge of chemistry and an exquisitely delicate taste in matters pertaining to the toilette, joins forces with an associate of a prominent New York parfumerie and establishes an agency for one of the most widely known European houses—the success of such a combination might be rightly expected to attain that degree achieved by Mrs. Dodge and Miss Tetley.

Several years ago Mrs. Dodge evolved a formula for skin cream. For a time she kept this secret for her own use, but finally her friends prevailed upon her to manufacture her preparations for the discriminating public.

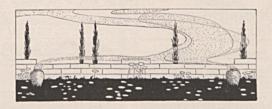

With the incorporation of Mrs. Dodge and Miss Tetley, the Natura Company came into existence. They became sole agents in the United States for Bichara, and established their first shop on Thirty-fifth Street, but increasing business soon compelled them to move to larger quarters at 461 Fifth Avenue.

The small announcement of the Natura Company is a familiar sight in the Shoppers' & Buyers' Guide. It has attracted many Vogue readers to the shop, and, incidentally has materially increased the clientele of Miss Tetley and Mrs. Dodge.

She never rests—the woman who dresses on a limited income. Before the snow flies she must plan her winter wardrobe; before the last blizzard she wonders what her new frocks for the summer will be and what will be her you-would-never-know-it-was-made-over frocks. It is the wise woman who knows in the spring what she will need in the autumn, and plans accordingly. It is she who is the smartly dressed woman, for it is she who understands clothes; and the understanding of clothes is mightier than many incomes. Open this magazine and read it from cover to cover for its innumerable suggestions on dress and on house decoration; for these suggestions will enable one to stretch a limited income to include the word smartness. word smartness.

SMART FASHION SHOPS FOR LIMITED INCOMES

Do you think of this as a shopping month? It is. The shops are brimming over with wonderful bargains in lingerie, month? It is. The shops are brimming over with wonderful bargains in lingerie, linens, and filmy things for the summer. Vogue has in the past proved itself so adept in pointing out the best values, that this Smart Fashions Number is awaited by many wise women who use it as their buying guide. The reason for this is that, more than any other agency, Vogue is in a position to tell you where, in all New York, you can purchase best and can have work done for the price you want to pay. There are all sorts of incomes; there are all sorts of shops to meet them. Vogue knows them all,—that is, all the good ones; for, obviously (and yet how many there are who forget itl), the poor shop, no matter how "cheap," is always too expensive to be patronized. This magazine is full of suggestions about fashions and household decoration, and these suggestions moderate-priced shops will execute. Then the

on page 18 is full of others. There is a place where everything may be done for you. If you do not believe it, ask Vogue. And having told you what is best in the shops, Vogue stands ready to do the actual purchasing for you. Is it possible that you are still unaware of the fact that the Vogue shoppers are busy, day in and day out, executing all manner of shopping commissions? You have simply to tell on what page the desired article is illustrated or described, and to send a check or money order to cover the cost price of the article and the postage or express. Vogue will buy it for you. Some shops will make delivery free of charge. But the best part of the service is that Vogue asks no fee for its experienced service.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS

The fact that you expect to move from your town house to your country house, and to spend the summer at Newport and the winter at Palm Beach, need not deter you from ordering Vogue. Vogue will keep up with you, provided you give three weeks' notice.

You weren't thinking of getting married this spring—no? Perhaps you were married last spring? Well, perhaps you were married twenty springs ago and are migrating to your summer home? At any rate, Vogue ventures a guess that if you were not married in the spring at all you wish you had been. For you, then, is the next issue of Vogue, under this cover:

The cover of the next, the May I issue, is by Helen Dryden

OF BRIDES

Helen Dryden is just the one to do the next Vogue cover because Helen Dryden has a personal interest in the coming Bride's Number. Yes, she is going to illustrate for you her best varieties of brides and bridesmaids. And our new wedding veils (for, of course, no one marries in the out-of-date veil of last June) are really inspired. They were so lovely that Vogue had an inspiration to make coiffures to go with them. Obviously, for a Lou's Seize wedding gown, there should be a Louis Seize coiffure. Therefore, after a perusal of old fashion plates, Vogue and Helen Dryden have adapted for you coiffures to suit your period gowns. These are just the beginnings of the bride's interests in this nearly the largest issue of the year. Helen Dryden is just the one to do the

AND HER HOME

After the bride comes the summer home, and Vogue intuition and Vogue artists have done their willest to coax the bachelor from his den. To begin the issue, there will be three pages of teahouses especially designed for us by Robert Lawson and Robert Locher of Bandbox Theatre decoration. Robert McQuinn has done his roseate best on two color pages of garden furniture—yellow window-boxes and blue garden-fountains and pink garden-gates, and hanging gardens and hanging hammocks and all the other things Robert McQuinn does inimitably. Pietre Myer has put his art to work on bird-cages.

By all means, if you want to stay an unshaken feminist or an independent bachelor, don't buy the next Vogue.

MRS. JOHN ASTOR

Though she had been in New York but a very short time, Mrs. Astor sailed for London late in February. One of her objects in returning to England is to study the conditions of the workers in munition factories there, for Mrs. Astor, who is a member of the joint committee on Welfare Work for Munition Factory Employes, has been devoting a great share of her time to this cause. The work is under the welfare department of the National Civic Federation, of which her son, Mr. Vincent Astor, is an officer. This organization is meeting one of the biggest welfare problems of England (see page 124)

VOGUE

The garden tool house, which at top is a pigeon house, accords with the dwelling house in every detail from its peaked great copper roof to the blue and gray trimming on its white cement walls, and it even holds a flock of blue and of white pigeons further to emphasize the color scheme

THE ARTIST GOES BACK TO THE FARM

As for Those of Moderate Means Who Would Know the Joy of a Country Estate, Let Them Lay Aside the Compass of Architect and Decorator and Setting a Course by the Artist's Knowledge of Beauty of Line and Color, Steer for a Reclaimed Farmhouse

The well varies the prevailing tendency of all the buildings to peaked roofs, but its curving top is non the less of copper. We have seen modernized wells, but McQuinn's is the first modern edition of the old oaken bucket

ITH the combination of a clever architect, an interior decorator, and a landscape gardener, any one of unlimited means can create in two years a house and garden that appear to have withstood the ravages of two centuries. The lord of the prospective manor may spend money as lavishly and extensively as he will. The architect, decorator, and gardener may allow free play to their technical knowledge and theories of beauty. Together they will produce a magnificent country home, perfect in every detail, true to period even to the last door hinge, appropriately furnished with all modern luxury, and surrounded by spacious formal gardens, accurately laid out in accord with the architecture of the restored house. One of the best features of American country life, however, is that a country house is not of necessity either elaborate or expensive. English society long ago demonstrated the possibilities of week-end cottages, and in these days even people of limited means may enjoy the delights of a pied-à-terre in the country, where the very simplicity and absence of formal correctness of architecture or decoration is one of the greatest charms. For a few months of the summer, even the most punctilious may well forget what they know of period styles, of decoration which emphasizes the architecture, and of all the other formalisms, and remember only what the artist knows of beauty of line and pleasing harmony of color. In the east, all about the country are to be found old farmhouses, often of decided excellence architecturally, which may be purchased at comparatively low cost. Often those which are really finest in construction are so finest in construction are so gray and neglected that the average person passes them by as too hopeless for consideration. Yet some of the most delightful places that one sees in the country have been restored from these unpromising ruins.

IN DOUBT, CALL THE ARTIST

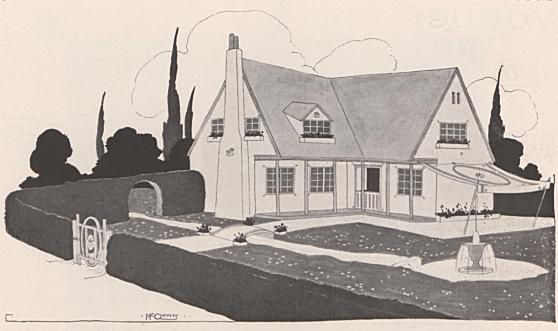

Frequently it is an artist who sees the possibilities of these places and undertakes their restoration. An architect may see the same possibilities in a place, but he sees too clearly the defects and difficulties, his standard for the reconstruction is much more exacting, and consequently he knows so many reasons for not doing the house over that the reasons for doing it are quite eclipsed. The artist, who is unhampered by any excess of technical knowledge of construction, dares anything and is afraid of nothing, and (doubtless the captious will say, on the time-honored principle of fools and angelsy also success in the final result. His keen imagination naturally deals with things as they appeal to the eye, and he has, for that very reason, a gift for transforming a house by surface changes in a fashion which is not known to that far wiser builder, the architect. Such changes are, of course, many times less expensive than actual reconstruction.

For the white cement house which appears at the top of the following page, the starting point was one of those quaint, high-gabled, one-story-and-a-half houses, which grew up in this country as a sort of American version of the Queen Anne cottage or, perhaps, a remnant of Dutch influence. In modernizing it, Robert McQuinn, who does not pretend to be an architect, but only an artist, drew color inspiration from a copper roof, for there is no more beautiful green to be found in any available material than the green of the patina which results from the weathering of copper. There have been times when copper was not prohibitive in price, and there may be such

All about the countryside are to be found quaint little story-and-a-half houses, which owe something to the Queen Anne cottage and more to the Dutch farmhouse, and these may be to the seeker after a lodge in the wilderness, what the week-end cottage is to English people—that is, if modernized with the paint that is mixed with brains, and such charming playthings as a miniature fountain, a well-trained brook, and wise little flowers that grow where they should times again. In the meantime, this color may be wonderfully well imitated with paint, if the paint is mixed by an expert painter. Copper, however, is mixed by an expert painter. Copper, however, is the original intention in these designs, and the artist has used it on every building on the place, including the well, the beehives, and the garden tool house, all of which are pictured on page 31. The upper part of this tool house (at the top of the page) has been designed as a pigeon house, and the amusing weather-vane which caps its

and the amusing weather-vane which caps its copper climax reminds us pleasantly that McQuinn is one of Vogue's own artists.

Keeping in mind harmony of color as well as of design, the artist used gray and blue in conjunction with the patina green roof and the white cement of the walls. Of course it may be white paint if the doing over of the house with cement is impracticable or too expensive. The porch panin the dispersion of the lodge with central is impracticable or too expensive. The porch posts and house trimmings are gray, the porch floor is of blue tiles, and the awning is white, with stenciled design in blue. The small decorative

On the house, these as well as the blue squares at the window corners, may take the form of glazed tiles set into the cement. The color suspection is clevecolor suggestion is clev-erly carried into the garden paths, which are of pebbles set in cement, with an occasional blue with an occasional blue or green marble of large size set in with the stones. ACCESSORIES IN HAR-MONY

The garden tool house and pigeon house com-bined furthers the deco-rative scheme with a flock of blue and of white pigeons, and the peaked copper roof keeps it in harmony with the house. Here, as in the house, the trimmings are gray and blue, and the walls are of white cement; the weather-vane is brightly painted. Just where the lawn slopes down to the apple orchard, there is a row of beehives unique in shape, but mone the less practical, which add greatly to the decorative effect of the orchard. These beehives have gabled roofs and carry the same decoration as the house, as may be seen from that pictured at the lower right on page 31. The garden well is built of concrete, but the roof, which varies the general scheme of gables, is of copper, and the wooden framework supporting it is painted in accord with the decorative scheme.

FOR THE LOW-CEILED ROOM

The majority of the old houses which offer themselves as fields for the ingenuity of the artist, have the old-time fireplaces, without which no house is complete from an artist's point of view. Often, too, there is a large low-ceiled room which is admirably adapted to treatment such as has been given by Frederick Sterner to the dining-room illustrated at the bottom of the the dining-room illustrated at the bottom of the page. In this room, the plastering has been cut away, leaving an open ceiling with plaster between the beams. These beams are stained to give an air of age and the plaster is toned to harmonize with the walls. The tiled floor, clean, cool, and pleasing to look at, is ideal for a summer dining-room, and the decorated tiles inset about the fireplace add an element both decorative and amusing.

mer dining-room, and an element both decorative and amusing.

The wonders which may be accomplished with a house which seems in an almost hopeless state of ruin, is to be seen at Naaman's-on-the-Delaware, four views of which are shown on page 33. The oldest part of this house was built in 1654; other parts were added in 1738, but after the early years of the nineteenth century, little was done to the house, and its quaintness of form and detail were left unmarred by Victorian redecorators. At the time when a New York man decided to reintegrate this fine old house, some forty years of negsome forty years of neg-lect and hard usage had wrought such havoc that some of the floors were actually unsafe to walk upon. But the wonderful fireplaces in each room, fireplaces in each room, as well as in the upper and lower halls, were still intact, the doors were still hung on old hand-wrought hinges, and neglect had not destroyed the beautiful lines and proportions of walls and paneling.

A certain amount of a ctu al reconstruction was required to bring was required to bring was required to bring this house up to the standards of modern comfort. A concrete cel-lar and foundation were put under the house, a heating system was in-stalled, running water was supplied by means of a water-ram in the mill stream which runs near the house, and the house

Many an old-time farmhouse, abandoned to slow decay among its neg-lected fields, has just such great love-ceiled rooms as this. Built in the seventeenth century and rehabilitated in the twentieth, after it had reached the verge of ruin, this old house at Naaman's-on-the-Delaware is one of the finest examples of a house restored by an artist itself was entirely reroofed. When this roofing was done, the pillared porch which may be seen in the photograph at the top of the page, was built, and it is so perfect in design that it appears to have been always a part of the house. Inside the house, the remodeling was limited to the installation of bathrooms and a water tank.

THE ARTIST AS RESTORER

For these practical details only, were the services of architect and builder required. Beyond that, it was careful restoration only, and such as an artist can give, which put the house into livable condition, and it was largely due to the interest and excellent advice of the artist, Herbert Moore, that the house became so fine an example of the superiority of restoring over remodeling. Throughout the house, countless layers of paint and wall-paper were removed, revealing most interesting and unexpected details of paneling and carving. The beautiful old stairway, though sadly battered, retained its original lines, and careful restoration brought back its original beauty, as is clear from the photograph in the middle of this page. Half-buried in the lawn was found half of an old mill-stone, which had evidently belonged to some mill long ago turned by the near-by stream. This was dug up and incor-

Hard usage had battered the handsome old stairway (right) almost beyond recognition —almost, but not quite, for enough was left of its original form to guide the artist in restoring it to its original beauty

Not all the years of neglect could alter the great fireplaces, the fine paneling, or the hand-wrought hinges. Though many of the original furnishings are now in Independence Hall, the indefatigable artist has supplied their like and even painted copies of the portraits which once hung upon walls porated in the hearth of the fireplace in the lower hall, and the decorative effect may be seen in the photograph at the bottom of this page. The historical interest was later increased by the finding of a record telling that this stone was removed from the mill in 1777 by General Washington's orders. Aside from the mill-stone, the garden contained another historical relic in the form of an old stone blockhouse, built in 1654. Additions and restoration made this into a picturesque cottage for the gardener.

RESTORED EVEN TO ITS PORTRAITS

While the house was being restored bit by bit and furniture sought out to fit into it, its history and traditions were also brought to light. The mill-stone record was discovered, and it was also learned that some of the furniture and portraits which had belonged in this house are now in Independence Hall in Philadelphia. It was, of course, impossible to regain possession of these things, but Moore made every effort to equip the house with furnishings equally correct in period, and, as a final tribute, he spent many days in Independence Hall painting faithful copies of the portraits which had once hung upon its walls. So the house is really remarkable, not for any striking decorative effects or expensive reconstructions, but because an artist's taste and love of old-time things skilfully recreated its colonial atmosphere.

THE COMMONPLACE REALITY

By way of an interesting experiment, by way of an interesting experiment, we asked one of our artists, whom (in strict confidence, be it said) we suspected of being the most impractical of them all, to tell us just what she would do if she could have her way with the most forlorn and dismallooking little house which we could find in a day's journey. We took Claire Avery to see the little house, and showed her the photograph the little house, and showed her the photograph of it which is here reproduced in the middle of this page, the second from the top. At the top and bottom of the page, are the visions which this forlorn bit of human housing inspired in the artist soul of Miss Avery, and in the middle of the page are an ideal tenant and beside her a dream of a garden gate, which this artist added just to show her interest in the subject. the subject.

THE ARTIST'S VISION

In this dreary and commonplace little house, the artist saw just an incompleted thing, a basis from which the most attractive of small cottages was meant to be and still could be developed. And (we say it in all contrition

When she had changed the chimneys, extended the eaves, and centered the door, we saw that the house was made; wide windows, pergola, and sun room followed. Of course, half the battle is in the color scheme of red and white and the formal planting for our previous judgment of impracticality) she showed us just how this transformation might actually be transformation might actually be wrought. Great as is the alteration accomplished in the appearance of this house, it involves no change more serious than the altering of the chimneys,—a considerable piece of work, it is true, but one easily accomplished by any capable builder and mason.

The roof remains the same, except for the extension of the eaves—a matter easily attended tension of the eaves,—a matter easily attended to by the carpenters employed to re-shingle the roof. A competent builder would find no diffi-culty in making those changes in windows and doors which so completely alter the façade or in adding the sun room and the pergola at the sides. As to the finish on the outside of this house, the original clap-boards might be re-tained and painted, although the better plan tained and painted, although the better plan would be to put on the colonial shingles or to have the walls prepared and finished with stucco. With any of these finishes, an appropriate color scheme would be white for the walls and red for the roof, with a red lintel above the green door the root, with a red inited above the green door and the glass door, and red lines about the white window boxes. Of course, the planting is half the battle, and that is the artist's opportunity. Thus is it proved again that the basis of an artist's genius is the ability to "substitute a radiant world of dreams for the meaner world of our common day."

BUBBLES of FASHION RISE to the SURFACE in PARIS

For Sensation in Paris One Shops, and Sees, Here the "Prix de Guerre," There Skirts Shirred to Garters, Everywhere the "Tonneau" Skirt

To succumb to the Doucet "temptation," one needs but to meet with this tea-gown of white silk with overdress of white chiffon, silverembroidered, and coat of Valenciennes tied with silver cord. And what else binds one?—a gold anklet tasseled with gold

PEACH blossoms were pink in the gardens about Paris and the workmen were beginning to plant bulbs and shrubs in the public gardens, when a sudden cold snap with a belated snowstorm blackened the rosy petals, brought out furs which had been too hastily packed away, and sent Parisians scurrying along the boulevards with chins and noses muffled in furs and scarfs. After a mild winter these cold days seemed all the more severe, and the storm was one of unusual severity for Paris. The snow was twelve or fifteen centimeters deep in the Tuileries gardens; to one accustomed to the snowfalls in New York, such a snowfall might seem of slight importance, but in Paris, where it snows so seldom and where a snow-plow is unknown, it was almost a catastrophe, stopping the traffic in the streets.

WITH SNOW COMES THE SMALL BOY

Perhaps for the first time in their young lives small boys indulged in snowballing. Soon adept, they pelted passers-by. Whack! and a handful of soft wet snow struck the chauffeur behind the ear. Bang! and a snowball of the stony variety shattered the window of my taxi. Oddly enough, the driver of the taxi insisted that I should pay for the broken pane of glass. And when I protested in poor French and walked away, he shouted after me, "Sale Angl—" and stopped short; for the English are now the friends of France.

The winter has passed quickly, however. Prayers for the eternal repose of the soul of Louis XVI were scarcely finished, it seemed, when representatives of the American colony were busy

Parisians are asking themselves each

SOCIALLY SPEAKING

Socially, in Paris, it has been a dull winter. Society was not only interested but positively immersed in good works. Hospitals and work-rooms, charities and "relief" movements occupied the and "relief" movements occupied the time of the grand monde so thoroughly that even the event of the season, the Russian Ballet, scarcely lured them from their chosen seclusion. As to the Americans in Paris, the Depews, the Carrolls of Carrollton, the Harjes, and the Lehrs spent the greater part of the winter at Monte Carlo. The Countess Tyszkiewicz, the Prince and Princesse Duleep Singh, Lady Bertie, and other well-known Parisians also spent some weeks on the Côte d'Azur, which, to the initiated, spells Monte Carlo. What,

Just a soft white tulle blouse is far too calm a thing; Paquin must needs touch it with gay coral embroidery, dot it with gleaming pearl sequins, hang slim red velvet ribbons down its sides, and add belligerent little plaited tulle frills, each one standing up for itself

This wrap of tobacco brown cloth is topped with a black satin collar so high and so deep that it is practically a wrap in itself. An ornament of metal and enamel capably performs the important task of holding the fronts together, and brown braid ornaments guide the wearer to the tiny armholes. The sketches on this page were selected and approved by Mme. Paquin

No, she isn't an absent-minded young person who is wearing her wrap front to back. She's an extremely chic young person, for that's the way of new veraps. The skirt of this tea-gown is of chiffon plaited again and again, and its bodice is of gold Venetian point and a wisp of pink chiffon. indeed, would the blue coast be without "Monte"—where, by the way, there has been a marked revival of interest in gaming.

The Paris hotels have sheltered some distinguished visitors for a night or two—what colored Ca'line would call "transoms." The Duchess of Westminster occasionally visits the Ritz, and the Princess Rospigliosi also often stops there when in Paris. Lady Nunburnholme is often a guest at this hotel, stopping over for a day on her way to and from Nice. The Crillon has had its quota also, including the only Lloyd George and other dignitaries.

THEATRICALLY SPEAKING

Theatrically, Paris has been none too gay. At the Opéra, after seeing the brilliant Russian Ballet, we have settled down to a mild sort of opera — Tchaikovsky's "Eugène Oniegin," "Samson et Dalila," sundry acts from "Faust" and from the other operas. We saw Mary Garden score a success in "La Traviata," and we applauded Marie Leconte in "La Figurante" at the Comédie Française. We saw Polaire at the Olympia and "Anna Karénina" at the Porte Saint-Martin. and "Jusqu'au Bout" at the Folies-Bergère. And none of these was productive of lasting gaiety. One wearies of the theatres, the tearooms, the works of "necessity and mercy," and pines for the Paris of before the war—gay, bubbling, laughing Paris, with its Magic City, its races and Bois de Boulogne flirtations, its frivolities, its foolishness. tions, its frivolities, its foolishness.

MARIE LOUISE

This is Mme. Marie Louise herself, photographed in the very first frock she ever made, for govens are her new departure. It's of green changeable taffeta, gaily embroidered; the hat is of beige straw, and the parasol of robin's egg blue tulle. Mme. Marie Louise made everything but the shoes, and would have made those, had not the shoemaker stuck to his last

"Monseigneur," the priestly tea-gown at the left, is of mousseline in the solemn shade called bishop's purple, girdled with a band of purple taffeta. The underdress is of taffeta of pale, calm, nunlike gray, with an undeviating row of grave purple buttons. The only trace of the pomps and vanities of this wicked world are the touches of grège cord embroidery on the mousseline

Its designer's thoughts are far from worldly things this Lenten season, for "Angelus" (right) like "Monseigneur," has an air which leads one to think of ecclesiastical vestments. It is of purest white tulle, banded with somber black tulle, touched with black and white beads, and set over a white silk slip. The girdle (Parisian holiness goes just so far) is garnet velvet

With all due respect to Burbank, he has never produced such remarkable blooms as these; but then, of course, Burbank never thought of using a prune satin cushion for a flower-bod. Odette did, and she raised great green blossoms edged all about themselves and their leaves with a green and red galloon

In despair, one goes shopping, and there at least one feels at home; but at present, shopping in Paris is a ruinous pastime. The prix de guerre is appalling. One hesitates and is lost. Is appaining. One nestrates and is lost. A new hat demands, instantly, a new frock; and almost before the delicate muslin collar of the new tailleur is rumpled, the hat looks out of date and the quest begins again. Even a Scotchman would grow extravagant in Paris.

SHOP ONE MUST

Succumbing, myself, the other day, to this subtle influence, I put my all into my pocket and recklessly went a shopping. I went first to Marie Louise's. Mme. Marie Louise, known as the creator of most charming hats, has made her début in the world of dress. She is photographed ing hats, has made her début in the world of dress. She is photographed at the left standing, as it were, on tiptoe on the threshold of her new field, in a frock of her own designing —her very first creation, in fact. Marie Louise made the frock, she made the hat, she made the bag and the parasol,—everything, in fact, except the strapped black satin shoes, and one almost suspects Marie Louise of having made them too!

I was so inspired after this visit that I walked, "bold as brass," into the Maison Worth, where the salon worth em as the fashion bubble which burst there in February. At least, so it seemed at first; closer inspection revealed the fact that the "fragments" were quite new and frivolously smart. It is almost surprising to see fluffy frilly things at the Maison Worth. It is Worth, so to speak, in a new dress, and not an unbecoming dress by any means. In fact, the head of the house of Worth is rather partial to the new frock and likes the tulles and the gauzy cloudy skirts, the whimsical little bodices, and all the delightful details of the new fashion.

In contrast to all this coquettishness,

In contrast to all this coquettishness, M. Worth showed me length after length of magnificent brocade in rose and gold, in mauve, yellow, and green combined with shimmering metal threads. One exquisite piece of pale rose satin was bordered with an elaborate Chinese design woven in gold thread. One length of mauve, in stripes, was agleam with flat threads of silver, a most beautiful fabric and priced its full worth. Another, in gray, was woven most beautiful fabric and priced its full worth. Another, in gray, was woven with threads of gold; and another—but one must visit the particular salon where these things are displayed in order to appreciate their rare beauty. As for me, I had no longer the courage to ask for a simple thing like serge, so I seized a convenient moment to slip out of the door into a cold unfriendly world, and took shelter in a small and friendly doorway marked above, "Doucet."

"Doucet."
And one need go no farther than the door to catch a glimpse of the airy organdy and muslin frocks and blouses that Doucet is making. This year they are lovelier than ever. Such sheer flounces, such delicate fluted frills, such dainty flaring sleeves and simple bodices. In yellow, in bluet, rose, and white, with quaint turn-over collars, effective cravats, and odd muslin cords and ornaments as trimming—the Doucet "temptation" is a distinct sensation, with a pristine freshness all its own. I looked and longed and lingered—and walked on, and up the steps.

"Let me see," I said, "a tailleur in dark blue serge."

We have been so accustomed, for years, to dark blue serge, that it seems almost incredible that serge of another color can exist; but this season has shown us serge in sky-blue, in beige, in green, rose, gray, and even yellow. Yellow serge—how droll!—but for all that, collar and cuffs of yellow serge on a dark, a very

This blue striped taffeta gown, like all the gowns of its designer, is flat back and front, flare it never so far at the sides. It is gaily puffed and rosetted and then—here's the thing—the whole affair, rosettes and all, is covered with blue tulle. The hat is of black silk, its brim swooping to show a yellow straw facing yellow straw facing

This puritanical frock is of black liberty Ihis puritanical frock is of black liberty satin, stitched in sedate rows. The deep collar and cuffs are of white organdy, and the coy little band at the throat wonders (in French, of course), "Why don't you speak for yourself, John?" The prim little girdle is lined with nothing more daring than while liberty satin

The new blue serge is so extremely dark that it might almost pass for black, and we see the same somber shade in alpaca. Rough serges have retired in favor of the fine thin variety which can be shirred or plaited without being bulky. However, coarse serge or cheviot is sometimes used for loose sport coats and wraps, and for an occasional tailored frock. Chéruit uses, for these coats, a sort of coarse canvas or etamine, and lives them with this checked woolen will and lines them with thin checked woolen voile.

One of mustard yellow is lined with mauve and white checked voile, with a thread of black.

STOP! LOOK! THE CHÉRUIT BELT

Chéruit embroiders black alpaca with dull blue thread and gray alpaca with grège thread, and does other surprising things, all new and all pretty. And the Chéruit waist-line is different from any other in Paris. As the Premet manikin sinks into her collar, so the Chéruit manikin sinks into her belt, which is not at all a proper belt confining the frock at the waist-line, but a sort of loose cuff which rises into space from the top of the hips, confining nothing at all. But the Chéruit waist-line always is elusive. Just as you think you have pinned it to the hips, you find it sliding down in front and up in the back, or vice versa; and in some cases Chéruit embroiders black alpaca with dull in the back, or vice versa; and in some cases it meanders about the figure apparently at its

It takes all kinds of dresses to make a mode; some are of the fluff-and-feathery home-keeping variety, and some tend toward the practical. This frock of the latter class is of marine blue serge and black satin. It belts itself twice, once with blue cloth and once with marron doeskin and is embroidered with gold and doeskin own sweet will—up and down, with a point here and a curve there, leaving us mystified but admiring.

The Chéruit manteau is different from any other in Paris. First, there is a smart collar and a short cape slightly longer in the back than on the sides, which crosses surplice fashion in front and fastens invisibly. To this is attached—or the sides, which crosses surplice fashion in front and fastens invisibly. To this is attached—or shirred—a second longer cape, very wide, which is detached from the upper cape for a few inches on each side, leaving spaces through which the arms are thrust. The effect of the garment is that of a great cape widening out from the shoulders; and the great width of the lower section is arranged to accentuate the width at the hips. It is an exceedingly graceful garment.

Even more remarkable is the new Chéruit tea-gown of brilliant rose changeable taffeta which falls with enormous fulness straight from shoulder to heel in the back, and is, in front, shorter, less ample, and belted across with brilliant red ribbon. This tea-gown is at once simple and marvelous, a creation of which even the house of Chéruit may be justly proud. A somewhat similar creation in black is embroidered with blue at the lower edge and is belted with tasseled beadwork and collared with fur.

The summer muslins at the Maison Chéruit are airy nothings of the finest variety. And the price? One is tempted to ask how so much can be paid for mere muslin; but a Chéruit "muslin" is another story. One frock of pink muslin has a tablier front which, hanging loose, almost conceals the fact that the skirt underneath is attached to the ankles—or, to be exact, to the legs a tached to the ankles-or, to be exact, to the legs a little above the ankles. The skirt is simply shirred, apparently, to the front of a garter worn on each leg. This idea appears in several other frocks. In one instance, the garter effect appears on one side only, above one knee, while in another case the shirring is just below the knee; in each case the other side floats free.

The Chéruit skirts, some of them, conform to the wel-known tonneau lines. Viewed from the front they are exceedingly wide and rather long; while viewed from the side they are very straight and slim. These new skirts, attached at a somewhat uncertain waist-line to the straight, smart, shapeless corsages which it pleases Chéruit to make this season, result in a decidedly new and different silhouette.

a decidedly new and different silhouette.

And at Chéruit's there are also things that tie, belts and cravats that tie and tie and tie, in the true Chéruit fashion.

IT BALLOONS, THE "TONNEAU" SKIRT

The tonneau skirt, distended on the hips by a boned form worn under the skirt or by hoops of boning introduced into the skirt itself, has taken Paris by storm. The flat straight effect in front and back is preserved everywhere. Lanvin accomplishes it by weighting her skirts heavily in the middle front and back, while they balloon riotously on the hips. In other instances, the ends of the side hoops, which are sewed in some way to the skirt proper, are attached to a tight way to the skirt proper, are attached to a tight underskirt just forward and back of the hips

One of the signs of the times is the use of odd One of the signs of the times is the use of our cords and tassels as trimmings. This frock of beige faille and beige mousseline dispenses with buttons and uses its cord trimming to fasten the waist. The quaint turn-over collarwhich is another sign of the times—is in blue mousseline and is embroidered all around

Paris looks with favor upon the pointed bodice raris tooks with jacor upon the pointes observed in whatsoever direction it points, just so long as it is guiltless of the support of old-time boning. This bodice of black taffeta ornamented with bouquets of rose and green, points with pride to the black tulle upper-bodice. The ruches which appear at odd intervals are of the taffeta

MARGAINE LACROIX

Again, an arrangement of hoops and muslin very much like the bustle which supported "back drapery" years ago is worn on each hip; but this hip "bustle" is very narrow and long drawn out; and is attached to the belt and, lightly, to the skirt itself, just enough to hold it in place. Each house arrives at the tonneau effect in its own manner, but the result is practically the same.

tonneau effect in its own manner, but the result is practically the same.

As to the boned corsage, that has been tacitly sidestepped by the couriers, except in two or three isolated instances. We have the tight pointed bodice, but it is not boned. In fact, it just escapes being draped, but it is a tight pointed bodice just the same. Then we have the loose pointed bodice sponsored by Chéruit and Doucet. Then there are the bolero-basque and the straight, wide-skirted, one-piece dress, girdled vaguely at the hips, and the balloon draperty, of which Premet is so fond. Each house has, also, its own short sleeve, and each its petticoat, although some houses dispense with the petticoat altogether. Maison Worth shows a beruffled affair of pale rose voile de soie and lace-edged tulle. Chéruit makes a soft petticoat of rose satin. guiltless of crinoline or any kindred stiffening, flounces it below each hip, and edges it with lace. Premet turns up a taffeta skirt carelessly at the bottom and attaches it to a straight lining of modest width, at the same effect. Mme. Lanvin's hooped skirts are enormously wide and very short, as her models on page 45 show.

The evening coat sketched at the left is one of the delightfu evening wraps made by Dœuillet. The collar is very high, there are no sleeves at all, and the coat is trimmed with gold roses and embroidery. Sketched on page 44 is a frock of claret voile and serge, which shows plainly just how M. Dœuillet arrives at the tonneau effect. The voile skirt falls over a taffeta foundation skirt which is stiffly ruffled on the hips to produce the desired width, and M. Dœuillet doen't care who knows it.

One of the prettiest evening wraps is of black faille, very full and quaintly cut, and trimmed with gold embroidery and gold roses. There are no sleeves at all; and viewing this, the collar took warning in due time and stood firmly upon its right to existence

Quite new and quite frivolously smart is the beruffled blouse which Dewillet fashions of blue velvet bows, blue taffeta, and marine blue chiffon, over pink malines lace. The blouses of the new mode lay claim to daintiness, fluffiness, and frilliness equally with the skirts

Each Maison has its own rendering of the transparent skirt, but, however varied in the rendering, the result is a gauxy billowy cloud as befits a tulle skirt. Over a foundation of blue faille embroidered in pink and silver is draped tulle and lamé in blue and silver

THE SHORTEST WAY TO FASHION

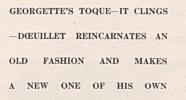

One may well ask, "Where is the simple and unadorned frock of yesterday?" for the couturiers continue lawish in their use of yards of material, with these yards embroidered. "Parigote" (above) is of black faille with a rose colored lining. The full sleeves and tunic are of black tulle, and the embroidery is of pearls and blue and white paillettes

Creamy gray crêpe and wings that match it are the technical description of this Georgette hat, but the tale is not told until the things that speak for themselves are heard in the smart line of the toque and the flaunting way of the wings

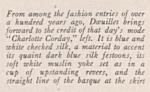

Of tulle, gray like mists, Georgette made this hat. Its tendencies are generous in the rosettes, but some one must have given the hat a tip to economize, for it took the tip, as one can see, and was afterward very close with the head

To judge by the three hats shown here, Georgette has an excellent theory that toques are at their best when surmounted with rosettes; and any one who can prove a theory as charmingly as this one is proved, with beige straw for rosettes and all, should be encouraged

Though it tries to cover it up by a calm exterior, Dawillet's suit "Carmelite" at the right is really much more ruffled than it seems. It began calmly enough in a Bordeaux red gabardine coat at top and a gabardine band at bottom, but in between Bordeaux red etamine had difficulty in concealing the ruffled agitation of the taffeta slip beneath it

VOGUE COVERS, FOR WHICH NEW YORK
STOPPED, LOOKED, LISTENED, AND APPLAUDED

"Follow the Crowd" is the English version of "Stop! Look! Listen!" and London, like New York, took the advice of the bill-boards. Ethel Levey, who rises for "The Star Spangled Banner" and not for "God Save the King," sings and dances and afresses the rôle that Gaby Deslys head-dressed in New York, bringing to it a few less pearls, but every bit as much personality. As in "Stop! Look! Listen!" the four seasons, as Yogue covers, appear—with an English accent

The patron saint of all tired business men decreed that "Follow the Crowd" should go a step farther than its step-mother, "Stop! Look! Lintten!" and fling all semblance of plot to the winds. It was a riot of girls, seemes, songs, costumes, dances, and more girls, all treading on each other's heels before remarkable backgrounds

ONE SHILLING

These are the Fogue cover girls of "Follow the Crowd" after they have heard their master's voice and stepped from their respective backgrounds to hear Joseph Coyne sing "The Girl on the Magazine,"—that plaintive ballad about "cover" and "love her"

We pride ourselves on the fact that our Robert McQuinn designed all the settings for "Follow the Crowd" in London just as he did for "Stop! Look! Listen!" here. As to the originals of the covers, the two lower ones were designed by Helen Dryden, the one at the upper left by Irma Campbell, and that at the upper right by Rita Senger

PAINTING SPRING'S PORTRAIT ON MUSLIN

How Could Anything So Solid as Prints and Dyes Be Used on the Frail Fabrics of Spring's Super-Feminine Fashions? They Must Be Painted, Daintily and Painstakingly, with Prim Posies and Bands of Delicate Color

UTTERLY, absolutely, superlatively feminine is the new mode, as frilly and fluffy and unreal as a mid-Victorian heroine, as quaint as an illustration from "Cranford." Woe betide the militant advocate of equal rights; when winter leaves, she must go out like a lion, for, with spring, the clinging vine comes in like a lamb. This spring, woman revels in femininity; she adds an inch to her already absurdly high heels, she wears frills and sashes and ruffles and fichus—yes, even bustles. IN AN ELIZABETHAN MANOR-HOUSE IN KENT, FAR FROM EVERYWHERE, MR. GRANVILLE BARKER AND HIS WIFE PASS THEIR SUMMER HOLIDAYS

T IS in that most lovely corner of England known as "the weald of Kent" that Mr. Granville Barker and his talented wife (Lillah McCarthy) have found their country paradise. Here, at "Court Lodge," an old Elizabethan manor-house among the hills of Kent, they have made themselves a summer hope such as hefits people whose working. home such as befits people whose working days are spent in the creating of original and beautiful stage-settings and the perfection of methods of stage production.

Only second in interest to the beautiful landscape, which on all sides stretches almost unbroken by habitations, is the old window pictured below is an unusually window pictured below is an unusually window pictured Delow is an unusually fine example of the Elizabethan type of that architectural detail. In the drawing-room and in Mr. Barker's study are carved stone mantles belonging to the same period, and the kitchen is a delightful relic of Elizabethan days and has kept its old-time air even to the old gun rack which still holds its own over the fireplace.

"Court Lodge" is several miles from the station, and it is further isolated by the famous "Wrotham Hill," the steepest, narrowest, unfriendliest-to-motors hill in all Kent. In this peaceful remoteness, away from the clamor of critics or the murmur of "movements," the noted producer and his wife pass their leisurely week-ends and long summer holidays. There is a simple old English garden filled with lavender and stocks and cinnamonpinks; there are plum trees trained against the wall; and saxifrage and moss and blueyed flowers fill in the chinks of the gray stones of the walks along the garden beds.

Mr. Barker and his wife, having given America the most charming glimpse of themselves, have been in London this past winter organizing the war benefits which are so necessary and under the name of which so much hard work is done.

"Court Lodge," which dates from the time of the great Tudor queen, has kept its old-time spirit and detail, and its owners take great pride in the old stone mullioned window which looks out across the rolling hills of Kent, and which, like the great chimney-stacks, asserts Elizabethan origin

In Mr. Barker's study is another relic of Tudor days, the carved stone fire-place of immense size. The severe and quiet decorative scheme bespeaks a studio where real work is accomplished, and it is in these surroundings that Mr. Barker works out his productions and his original stage-settings

HERE we are in the full of the Easterfull of the Eastertide. Suburban houses are open and there are week-ends
and dances at the country clubs, for the clans have gathered from the south and from over the Rockies and from over the Rockies and are at home again for a moment. It is the open season for spring weddings and wedding gifts and race-meets and new Winter Garden shows and window-boxes and brook trout and flannels and many other blessings. There will be the usual Easter parade on Eith Avenue in which there may or may not be ings. There will be the usual Easter parade on Fifth Avenue, in which there may or may not be people whom one knows. Everything is topsyturyy these days, and society is a wonderfluixture. We recognize no conventions and we rub elbows with everybody. After all, except for a few oases, Fifth Avenue is now a street of magnificent shops,—nothing more.

THE EASTER PARADE-BY MOTOR

Those who are in town now proceed to the Easter services in their cars, but there was a time when it was bad form to drive to church, and every one walked. It was then that the Easter parade was in its glory. I must ask my Uncle George about that historic period. Since we all ride, it is easy to avoid the firing-line of newspaper cameras and society reporters, but does one care? It is not worth the while. In fact, it does us good to be snapped. It has reformed our walk and our poise. We have learned to have a camera face, for, like the poor, the camera is always with us, and we know not when or where or how we may be snapped. Unconsciously, we pose a great deal. The motion-picture, instead of proving an additional terror, has but added to our repertoire. There is nothing like seeing yourself as everybody else sees you.

sees you.

The benighted man who is without feminine company of an Easter Sunday goes, after service, to his club (especially if it be on Fifth Avenue) and takes a post at the window for a while to have a look at the crowd; and that fills out his day. Of course he has previously depleted his bank account to the verge of an overdraft (that is, unless he has an account at a fashionable florist's), and he has sent endless parcels of rare blooms to various fair friends. That, of course, is blooms to various fair friends. I hat, or course, is little, considering his bachelor exemption from the charges of the modiste. Then, if he has observed just discrimination in his selections, he should be able to calculate (good Yankee word) on the favors which will come back before many days for these crumbs cast upon the waters. His knowledge of auction should help him to make the right bids and thus reap a harvest of dinners, week-ends, and other delights commensurate fourfold to his offerings.

MAN, THE CONSERVATIVE

Attention to special dress for Easter seems to be a purely feminine convention. Men, as a rule, are prone to observe changes of fashion only as their sports or their occupations dictate. We are rather more sober than usual this year, and many of us, I am sure, would delight to parade in khaki. These days, I seldom take up the subject of men's dress, save now and then, when I hear a never-verified rumor of some extraordinary revolution therein. With us, it is the same old story year after year, though for summer, it is true, we are making ourselves more comfortable and are wearing, more sensibly, clothes that suit our climate. I hope some day to see stiff straw hats in the discard, but I know the well-dressed man will never adopt striking clothes. Attention to special dress for Easter seems to clothes.

I have settled Uncle George, my venerable relative of whom I have spoken previously, in one of the cottages which my new neighbor moved away to make room for the handsome new Italian villa which he is just completing. The cottage is now located in a pleasant position in an apple orchard and commands an extensive view of the Sound. We have been very busy, Uncle George and I, planning all the à la mode additions and improvements and comforts to the house. The dignity of the family name is

Since the Easter Parade Is Now But a Procession of Motors, Let Us Turn from It to a Household Manned by "Footwomen" on the New English Plan and to the Social Quandary of What to Do instead of Going to Europe duly upheld, as Carolyn Wells has expressed it, by the "bathroom standard." We have had three extra ones put in, though the place is only three extra ones put in, trough the place is only a shack for the summer. We have also a solarium and, at a suggestion of a friend, there has been added what I would call a "lunarium." This is a species of conservatory tucked in an odd corner, and in it there are trees in tubs, and night-blooming plants, and seats. This is properly lighted by the moon itself, when that satellite is at its full; at other times it is a discreetly shadowy spot for after-dinner flirtations.

HERE'S TO THE "LADY COOK"

As the war has made the present race of "Meadowes" (my former perfect valet) scarce in the land and as Uncle George is well in his in the land and as Once deorge is well in his sixties, I thought it better to suggest that he employ some women servants. In fact, they are always better for a bachelor's or unattached man's establishment. They may gossip among themselves, but they are less inclined to neglect their proper tasks. I have their proper tasks. I have secured what is known in England as a "lady cook," a species of working house-keeper above the servants. With two "footwomen," as I believe they are called to-day in England, and the masculine attendance of a chauffeur and a gardener and handy man, the little chauffeur and a gardener and handy man, the little establishment is complete. Galsworthy has made one of his characters in "Fugitive" declare that the reason why the daughters of country vicars often grow wicked in later life is that they are fed too much rice pudding. I have recently observed a dangerous gleam in Uncle George's eye, which makes me fear a penchant on the part of the "lady cook" for roast mutton, curries, and puddings. However, Uncle George is growing daily more and more like a retired British officer, and he eats his three meals a day with great gusto, besides a more like a retired British officer, and he eats his three meals a day with great gusto, besides a hot luncheon at one and at five tea with toast and muffins and all kinds of potted meat sand-wiches and cress and cakes. Yet there was a concession from the "lady cook" the other evening, for Uncle George dined four of us on a bisque exercise, that dream of a creole soup, deliciously done brook trout, squab chicken with green peas and Bermuda potatoes, asparagus, iced strawberries, a savory, dessert, and brûlot, with champagne all through,—which certainly showed cosmopolitan taste.

OUR LIFE LACKS GINGER

A beautiful season is this Easter time, but this year it finds us in a quandary. Our life lacks ginger. We are puzzled as to where to go or what to do, for all our usual summer destinations are closed to travelers. After all, one can go on spending money here in America only to a certain limit, and then there is nothing more to buy. Ponies are in fine fettle, but there is not much sport in polo when there is no chance of an intersport in polo when there is no chance of an international match. Of course, a man may build houses, buy motors, lay out gardens and orchards, have all sorts of water craft constructed, and even go in for politics: but with all the world gone mad over this game of war, such diversions lack interest. There is only tameness in the present system of racing; and, anyway, when a man comes safely through daring flights in airship, aeroplane, or hydroplane, it is but an anticlimax if he comes a fatal cropper in steeplechasing. He is like that person who, at the Galveston flood, braved perils and dangers incumerable and after hair-breadth escapes succeeded in reaching dry ground at last, only to (Continued on page 90)

TRAILING the SLAYER of ROMANCE

OT a great many years ago, only the successful playwright, the favorite old actor, or the shrewd stage producer ever thought of writing a book about the stage. In those days, too, the contents of the book consisted mainly in reminiscences, anecdotes, and bits of theatrical gossip. Times have changed. Nowadays many people, of many altogether respectable occupations, write about the theatre, and, oddly enough, the subject chosen by the new school of stage writers is one on which the playwright, the actor, and the proon which the playwright, the actor, and the producer of other days were strangely silent—the art of writing the play itself. They do not greatly concern themselves, for example, with a question such as this: What has caused the disappearsuch as this: What has caused the disappearance of beauty, poetry, and imagination from our plays? Are they ruled out by our eager authors on playwriting, or does the Public God, that mighty arbiter of the destiny of plays who desires (if we are to believe what the manager tells us) nothing but musical revues and badly translated French farces, refuse to attend a play into which the young playwright, forgetful of his rule-book, has permitted a suggestion of these qualities to stray? • Certainly these qualities are not to be found in the plays that line the tinseled by-ways of Broadway. Jason and his heroes, sweeping the dark blue waters of the Ægean bound for Col-chis and the fleece of gold, were not embarked upon a more perilous quest than the rash adven-turer who would search the playhouses of New York for one imaginative concept one solden turer who would search the playhouses of New York for one imaginative conceit, one golden lilt of phrase, one trace of thoughtful beauty. Imagination he might discover, but he would come upon it employed in the invention of some mechanical device for shifting scenery; poetry he would find, dwarfed beyond recognition in the doggerel of a librettist, while beauty might occasionally reveal itself in the purely physical perfection of a player. Yet these three attributes have always been associated with other arts, and the Public God has loved them and worshipped at their shrine.

Yet, if what is the highest good in other creative art is quite worthless in the drama, what are we to say of the great classic plays, or even of the great plays of comparatively recent times? What of Rostand's "Cyrano de Bergerac" (Coquelin seems scarcely dead) which seared itself (Continued on page 90)

THOSE ILLITERARY LADIES

The Unlettered Ladies of De Quincey's Time Wrote the Spontaneous English of Free Minds and Punctuated It with the Feminine Dash-ofall-work; Their Granddaughters Compile Frozen Phrases while Specters of Technical Blunders Rise Up to Banish Wit and Mar Invention

E QUINCEY said that to find the most delightful current English of his day one must rifle the mails and read the letters of gently bred women under thirty years of age. Although the age limit seems invidious, the opinion was, perhaps, sound; but we must remember that the women of De Quincey's day had not enjoyed the early disadvantages of such instruction in the art of English composition as young American women now endure in many of our preparatory schools and not a few of our colleges. Women of two generations ago were, in truth, shamefully ill-educated, shamefully uneducated, if you like, but many of them had a subtle something that colleges often fail to give their granddaughters. Incidentally, also, their "finishing schools," unconcerned by the necessity of getting them into college, did not require them to give more time to Latin prose composition than to the art of writing their mother tongue. However ineffective the instruction in this latter subject, it could not have been treated less wisely than it is to-day by many who undertake to teach girls the charming art of self-expression in written English.

IF De Quincey's gently bred women under thirty did write their mother tongue with spontaneous ease and simplicity, it may have been because they escaped in some measure the host of critical "don'ts" so paralyzing to the spontaneity of the girls of this generation. Few of them knew an anacoluthon from a hendiadys, and they probably punctuated their delightful letters with the period and the feminine dash-of-all-work; but when they set themselves to write they did not nibble their pen staffs while all the things a writer should not do rose up to banish wit and mar invention. No more comic ghost from out the longago could stalk into our present world of lively young folk than that of the old-fashioned finishing school with its specious promise of "astronomy and the use of the globes," but those precious survivals, the crossed and recrossed letters of our grandmothers, seem to prove that they, who knew that ghost in the flesh, looked upon the art of writing English as a creative act rather than a critical exercise.

F^{OR} ten years in sequence, our girls in the preparatory schools go through text-books in grammar, elementary and advanced, text-books in rhetoric, simple and pedantic, text-books in English composition, ostentatiously modest and gravely pretentious, yet few of them enter college with any gift of native and spontaneous expression. They are glib enough in speech with one another, yes, and picturesque, but they rarely manage to put their real selves into what they write.

HERE and there a college professor of vision,—may his race increase,—realizing that a girl has something within her that longs for expression, affords an outlet to such longing. Meanwhile the clever girl has her free arena in the college newspaper, or she elects a course in the short story or the drama, and, neglecting much expected of her elsewhere, finds her opportunity there. The ordinary honest plodder comes out of college as she entered, with no true skill in the written use of her mother tongue. Her vocabulary has grown, her stock of facts, ideas, and opinions has been enriched, she has learned studious method and perhaps intellectual order, her spirit has broadened from reading and study, her emotions have ripened from close social contact with many of her own age,—and she still writes the English language without spontaneity, precision, or charm.

A LARGE part of the why and wherefore of all this lies in the fact that colleges for women, as those for men, persist in divorcing themselves from the fine arts, and english composition, if it is anything, is a fine art, and one to be acquired by patient practise. And, besides, the colleges unwisely assume that the preparatory schools have given the training in English composition that their entrance requirements have made impossible; and yet again, literature, which should go hand in hand with the study of composition, is often treated by the colleges not as an art for the refreshment of the human spirit, but as a science for the discipline of youthful minds. Finally, many of those who teach English composition in the colleges have had exactly the same vicious training as those whom they teach, and too few have any spontaneous gift of written self-expression. No wonder then if we should rifle the mails in vain for delightful letters, written by young American college women under thirty. It would take more even than De Quincey's imagination to undertake a confident search.

into a blaze of flowering loveliness is one of the most delightful results of the gardening fever.

In England at this time, woodland, park, and garden are gay with early blossoms, planted as though Nature alone had planned the scheme. Snowdrops open the season, flinging their delicate drifts of white across the grass with truly regal lavishness in view of the many thousands of their bulbs that are required to produce the effect of mass. Before these venturesome first-comers have gone, the crocuses appear, dotting the grass with tiny crowns of gold and cream and purple-veined white. They add their tints to the blaze of soft brilliance which means the arrival of the daffodils. Then comes the turn of the fanciful fritillarias, and, almost before one can pick a posy, one is in the thick of the rarest flower show of the year—snowflakes, epimedium, anemones, hyacinths, hepaticas, great purple patches of the dog's-tooth violet, until the grass is all adance with dainty spring flowers.

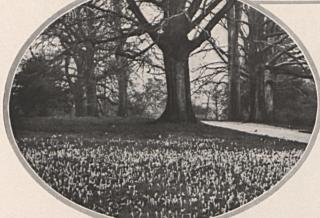

These flowers naturalize readily, and the elusive spring blossoms that used to cling shyly to woodlands and wild places may now dwell in captivity in the garden. Miss Ellen Willmott, the distinguished English gardener, in her spring garden at "Warley Place," Essex, has achieved exquisite effects with masses of delicately colored blossoms stretching under beeches to slim silvery birches at the water's

To know the colonies of ivory blossoms in the Sussex garden of Mr. William Robinson, one of the greatest present-day authorities on gardening, to see the blaze of gay color of Mrs. Agnew's naturalization of Darwin tulips, or to walk through the wild flower fields at Kew, is to pledge undying allegiance to the spring garden. As to the practicality of the spring garden, the tiniest plot invites its "garden in the grass." It may be only a clump of narcissus planted at the base of a friendly tree or a drift of turquoise muscari at the gate, but there can be no garden year without its "April adventures." Almost all of these early flowers may be planted in grass, either, as Miss Willmott likes them, in vivid sheets of bloom, or, as Mr. Robinson advises, in naturalistic groups with grassy spaces between. The Duchess of Rutland is well known as a beauty, an artist, and the mother of Lady Diana Manners (she whom King Edward VII nicknamed "Lady Perfect Manners"), of Lady Anglesey, and of Lady Charteris. It can be said of this famous family that they paint, they act, they first, they lade English society,—and they do all these things well. But if Lady Rutland were known for nothing else, the world would never forget that she—in company with Mrs. Asquith and others—inaugurated that select, intimate, and erudite circle known as "The Souls." The country seat of the Duke of Rutland is "Beleoir Castle," but following the famous Belvoir hounds, of which the Duke was Master, is a sport fallen in arrears since the war. At present, Lady Rutland is presicing over the "Château d'Hardelot," a picturesque old castle near Boulogne, which has been converted into a war hospital

MARY GARDEN'S PARIS APARTMENT SEES AND HEARS BUT LITTLE OF HER. FOR SHE DEVOTES HERSELF AND HER VOICE TO THE AID "HER" SOLDIERS IN THE TRENCHES

MARY GARDEN'S Paris apartment boasts that most delightful of all furnishings, a wood fire. But it is not the magic of the fire that draws her friends; they gather under the magic of a voice and personality, to hear her talk of her soldiers.

"Her" soldiers? Indeed, yes, for she is taking care of twelve poilus at the front, sending them regularly what they need to make themselves as comfortable as it is possible to be in the trenches. The photograph of one of her soldiers—a typical stalwart, bronzed, six-foot poilu—holds a place of honor in her rooms, and in an equal place of honor is a tribute of his service, a little silken table cover knitted by himself, probably in the trenches, and ornamented with many little bows of pink ribbon.

"They write me such cheerful letters." is her tribute; "and they are so sublimely, so fantastically brave. With such men at the front, on guard. France will always remain France."

Miss Garden has been devoting nearly all of her time to singing for the soldiers, and whether she sings at the Opéra-Comique, the Salle de la Sorbonne, the Trocadéro, or elsewhere, her name on the bill is always the signal for a crowded house. At a recent matinée at the Trocadéro, she sang before an audience composed of thousands of soldiers—an experience which brought her to the verge-of tears. In the near future Miss Garden plans a visit to America, where she hopes to collect money for the various war charities in which she is interested. money for the various war charities in which she is interested.

SUNNY FIELD FOR THE DECORATOR

To Every Country House an Enclosed Porch, and to That Porch a Type of Decoration All Its Own

THERE is a chill in the winds of spring and early summer which all the warmth of the sun can not overcome. It is during this season, no less than in the autumn, that the enclosed porch proves its worth. The sun shines with so grateful a warmth on spring days, that such a half-outdoor, half-indoor room as this, where one can be sheltered from the wind and have a fire in a real fire-place to combat any lingering chill, becomes the most delightful room of the house. Those who have known the delighter of the combat and the comb lights of an enclosed porch would refuse to

Sheltered from the wind, warmed by the sun, and furnished as no other room in the house is furnished, the sun-porch, half-way between garden and living-room, is the joy of the householder and the inspiration of the decorator. This porch from a Westchester country house is furnished with unusual wicker furniture

The perfection of comfort for the early months of spring is attained when the enclosed porch af-fords not only glofords not only glo-rious abundance of sun and protection from the wind, but also a crackling open fire to dispel the last lingering chill. dream of a country house without one, and as new adherents are won every season, the enclosed porch is rapidly becoming a rule of country life, whereas, in a not far dis-tant past, it was decidedly the exception.

Designers of country houses have done a great deal in making manifest the attraca great deal in making manifest the attractions of this hybrid porth-room, and decorators have widely developed its possibilities, obtaining many excellent results. This making of sun-porches is not an easy task for the decorator, for, while the sun-porch has long been a perfectly equipped adjunct to homes of unlimited means, the average householder has too long been used to feeling that almost anything in the way of furniture could be used on a porch. The decorator, therefore, has first to overcome this fallacy and then to find the way to combine all the solid comforts of a living-room with the out-of-door requirements of the porch.

of-door requirements of the porch.

A decorator who has given much attention to this particular branch of house decoration is Mrs. Barnewall, and examples of her very successful work are shown on this page. So enthusiastic over the possibilities of the enclosed porch has this decorator become that she has furnished her own studio in New York as an enclosed porch and treated it as though it were on the ground level and three miles from the nearest station, instead of tucked (Continued on page 104)

Glazed chintz striped in apple green fulfils the duties of both shade and awning in a decorator's studio, which cleverly overcomes its city surroundings and creates the illusion of a sun-room in a country house. Well adapted decoration may make even a small enclosed porch appear both dignified and spacious. INTERIOR DECORATION for LIMITED INCOMES

As the Price of Decoration Is in the Cost of Ideas, the Woman of Wisdom beyond Her Means Supplies the Ideas, Buys Materials, and Hires Her Own Workmen

Throughout colonial decoration, especially where it came under the influence of the Adam brothers, much is made of variations of the classic urn. This urnshaped lamp, of wood, hand-carved or fluted and painted to match the room, with a shade in silk or in a decorated parchment, is both handsome and unusual

In the decoration of the house, it is the attention to details that contributes smartness, individuality, and distinction. But the small matters on which the effect of a room so largely depends often cost a price prohibitive to limited incomes if purchased complete from the decorator or the shops, since it is, in most instances, for the idea that we pay, rather than for intrinsic value. The clever woman, however, is ever on the alert for ideas, and proceeds to carry them out herself at moderate expense, for she has the natural gift for creating her own novelties or of being able to reproduce what she sees, either with her own hands or with the aid of some "handy" person. The woman who is appreciative of these nice points of decoration usually has an available carpenter, painter, upholsterer, worker in wire, and an intelligent sewingwoman, as well as a list of shops which deal in unusual furnishings. With the assistance of these intelligent workers, she knows how to procure by subtle art a "professional" look in what is made. There is nothing more deadly than the amateur, home-made look. It is as unpardonable and to be avoided as assiduously in a lamp-shade as it is in a hat or a blouse.

It is perilously like to the henrietta cloth which we once wore as frocks, but the English wisely call it casement cloth, and it makes the most effective of inexpensive hangings, when used with decorative cornice and frings

If the thing one wants can not be found ready made, there is always some one who can make it. A clever workshop which specializes in originality recently turned out this novel wall fixture for electric lights. The light grows from gaily painted composition flowers and is shielded by a decorated parchment shade

For the woman with skilful fingers and the will to bring costly decoration within the range of limited means, there is a lamp-shade which would cost over thirty dollars in a smart shop, but which she can herself construct for a fraction of that sum. A wire frame can be bought or made to order to fit any lamp, and the outer covering is an upholstery taffeta which is soft and durable and may be had in exquisite color combinations at $8.40 a yard. The shade shown in the foreground of the illustration at the top of this page, in the middle, is of taffeta with a light rich yellow ground broken by broad stripes of green, cream, and black. It is gathered slightly at both top and bottom and stretched taut between the two; both edges are finished with a chenille fringe, known as moss fringe, in blocks of green, gold, and black. The same fringe may be had in other color combinations to order, as well as in plain colors. In plain colors, the price is $1.48 a yard; the blocking in colors is done to order at a slight extra charge. If the shade is made in the colors described, the lining should be either of white or of golden yellow china silk. The outer covering may, of course, be made of any variety of silk and in any desired colors to suit a room.

As to the details of cost and making, it is useful to know that it is possible to have wire frames for (Continued on page 102)

Olive Tell is the leading woman with that hyphenated star and well-known husband, Lou-Tellegen, in the ro-mantic play, "A King of Nowhere"

I T seems exceedingly unlikely that the plays of August Strindberg will ever attain a popular currency in the theatres of America. We are accustomed to consider life less darkly than this morbid-minded giant of the north. To most of us, this turgid and tremendous world continues to appear, in the wise and laughing words of Stevenson, "a brave gymnasium, full of seabathing, and horse exercise, and bracing manly virtues;" and we find it difficult to respond with sympathy to a sinister dissenter, a spirit that denies, a Titan hurling huge but ineffectual projectiles against a faltering but not unkindly Deity of things that ultimately are. The temper of the American people demands, in general, a dauntless optimism. We like our prophets, at least, to light little candles for us that shall shine like good deeds in a naughty world; but the stormy mind dles for us that shall shine like good deeds in a naughty world; but the stormy mind of Strindberg rushes like a tempest through a vale of tears, blowing out all lights and leaving us agrope in darkness.

Because of Strindberg's habit of insisting on recurrent themes, culled mainly from his own distressful experience of life, it is possible, from a reading of the round dozen of his plays that have thus far been translated into English, to formulate the leading motives of his sinister and disenchanting message. leading motives of his sinister and disenchanting message. What he has to say seems, mainly, to be this:—Life is war,—a war in which the individual, who is usually right, is at the mercy of a more powerful environment, which is usually wrong. The laws of human life are regulated by a stark injustice, which has been endowed perversely with the power to command. Life is appallingly monotonous, condemning us to repeat, over and demning us to repeat, over and over again, an experience from which we have already derived and digested the ultimate significance. Love, which is the origin and essence of life, is an embattled opposition of two spirits destined to destroy each other in the ineffectual endeavor to be one. The phenomenon of love is necessarily accompanied by the phenomenon of hatred; and among strong spirits, domesticity is impossible, because it implies a sacrilegious violation of the integrity of the individual. Sex is a curse, because it provokes passions inevitably destructive of the honesty and amiability of the individual human soul. There is an eternal duel between the sexes, in which of the individual human soul. There is an eternal duel between the sexes, in which the male (because he is more conscientious) is usually in the right, and the female (because she has no conscience) has usually the preponderance of might. In the warfare of life, the wrong (because it is more mighty) nearly always triumphs cover the circle and the formle over the right, and the female (because she is more deadly) most frequently destroys the male creature.

This is indeed a dark reading This is indeed a dark reading of the riddle of life; and it would not be reasonable to expect it ever to become popular with a theatre-going public whose favorite dramatist is Sir James Barrie. Those people who are interested in hearning what a great man has to say, regardless of whether they agree with it or not, will always constitute too small a minority of the general public to deliver of the general public to deliver a paying audience to the theatre. American students of Strindberg must therefore rely on special performances under private patronage for the op-portunity to see his plays pre-sented on the stage. Such opportunities, in recent years, have become somewhat sur-prisingly frequent. Scarcely a season passes, for example, without some semi-profes-sional production of "Miss Julia" or "The Stronger." Julia" or "The Stronger." Yet no other performance of Strindberg in America—not even Mr. Warner Oland's excellent production of "The Father"—has ever been at all comparable to the performance of "Easter" which was exhibited by the Stage Society of New York at the Gaiety Theatre on February 27 and 28, 1016. and 28, 1916.

"EASTER"

"EASTER" was beautifully played by a cast composed of Walter Hampcomposed of Walter Hampden, Ivy Troutman, Gertrude Berkeley, Gareth Hughes, Kathleen MacDonell, and Henry Stephenson,—all of whom contributed their services for this occasion; and it was beautifully set, in a simple and decorative scene designed by Norman Wilkinson.
Because of the mere fact that "Easter" works itself out to what may almost be called a happy ending, it is less, distressing than most less distressing than most of the other plays of Strindberg; and it reveals at many moments a reassuring sense of beauty. We are made to feel that after death comes resurrection, and after darkness light, even as after winter comes the spring. A sense of all the little signs of spring giving promise of the resurrection of a wintry world for the sings lyrically through the lines, as the time-scheme of the drama ticks its way from Holy Thursday, through Good Friday, on to Easter Eve.

Easter Eve.

Of dramatic action, in the ordinary sense, the play is almost utterly devoid. It is devoted, rather, to a minute and almost torturing analysis of a single state of mind. The characters live less obviously in the little room upon the stage than they may be said to live in a certain mental atmosphere by which they are mental atmosphere by which they are "cabined, cribbed, confined." This atmosphere is radiated from the mind of the hero—if he may be called a hero—Ellis Harris.

Ellis Heyst.

Ellis is an instructor in a preparatory school, and the hyper-activity of his mind is not sufficiently exercised by his petty found of daily duties. His father has been sent to jail for embezzling funds entrusted to him; and Ellis has brooded over the days of the sent to feel over the days of the Over this disgrace until he has come to feel Over this disgrace until he has come to recithat all's wrong with the world, and that anything which may happen in the future is sure to happen for the worst. The morbidness of his mind fills the household like an atmosphere; and for the other like an atmosphere; and for the other members of the family, who breathe that atmosphere, no normal life is possible. His mother has been reduced to a dumb-His mother has been reduced to a dumbness of suffering, perhaps more terrible to bear because it is inarticulate. His little sister, who was born to live in an atmosphere of faith and hope and joy, has been tortured into a state of seminsanity and has been taken away to an asylum. Benjamin, a charity pupil who lives in the house, is so afflicted by the gloom that he fails to pass a Latin examination for which he had been thoroughly prepared. Even the fiance of Fillis is unable to enlighten the darkness of his mind, for he distrusts her love and fears she will forsake him in the future.

What Ellis dreads especially is a visit tears she will forsake him in the future. What Ellis dreads especially is a visit from Lindquist, his father's chief creditor, who has a legal right to come and take away the family furniture; and Ellis hates Lindquist because he fears him. In the first act the dreaded creditor walks past the house; and Ellis trembles at the tapping of his stick and the disgusting slushing of his rubbers. In the second act we see the shadow of Lindquist stalk along outside the window cur-tains; and the fearful hatred of the hero is increased.

Then, in the third act Lindquist comes at last to call; and we now discover that he has come, not to take away the furniture but to help set the family on its feet by a signal deed of kindness. The terrible fore-boding which had darkened the first two acts of the play had arisen merely from the morbid imagina-tion of the hero; and the gloom is relieved at last when every one discovers that this foreboding has had no basis in fact and no rechnically, then, the project of the play is to make us dread a tragic termination, and then sud-denly to tell us that there was nothing to be dreaded after all. The subject of the drama is the incongruous disproportion between what actually happens on the stage and what has really happened in the morreally happened in the morbid imagination of the hero. This is a subject which, in its applicability to life at large, is worthy of profound consideration. "Easter," despite its happy ending, is neither a comforting nor a comfortable play, take it bing incalled novies" and most people would not be be and many of us are deeply indebted to the Stage Society for the opportunity of seeing it.

"MISS JULIA"

"MISS JULIA"

SEVERAL performances of Strindberg's "Miss Julia" have been given recently at the Thimble Theatre, at Fifth Avenue and Eighth Street, by a semi-professional company called the Bruno Players. The acting of the exceedingly difficult role of the heroine left much to be desired; but, on occasions such as this, the thing to be remembered is the opportunity afforded to see the play at all. "Miss Julia" is a lengthy one-act play. The action, which occupies an entire night from mid-evening until day, is summarized in a single scene, which is set in the kitchen of a castle. The content of this little play is very horrible. A neurotic and hysterical young woman (aged twenty-five), who is the daughter of a count, tantalizes her father's valet (aged thirty) into seducing her. The passage leading up to this abhorrent climax affords a very remarkable study of the mental pathology of sex. The subsequent situation of the young lady and the valet is a situation of abject despair. The noblewoman does not dare remain at home; she does not dare remain at home; she does not dare to run away alone; and she realizes that, if she elopes with the valet, they will merely hate each other. A vivid suggestion is set forth of the fierce warfare that is waged between plebeians who are rising through the generations and patricians who are correspondingly descending. In this instance, the rising scion of an old family have met, for a single moment of hysterical insanity, to wreck and run their incomplete in the series of the series of the real insanity, to wreck and run their incomplete in the series of the series of the series of the real insanity, to wreck and run their incomplete in the series of have met, for a single moment of hys-terical insanity, to wreck and ruin their divided destinies. The play ends, in a moment of great terror, with a prevision that the young noblewoman is about to NE of the essentials of the spring wardrobe is a top-coat for traveling and motoring. For the well-dressed woman it must be smart as well as practical, and though this sort of coat is unfortunately not easy to find, the model illustrated at the upper left on this page possesses the two necessary attributes. It is made in one of the newest of the cape fashions, and the material used is the new cravenette shower-proof cloth "crasho," a photograph of which is shown below the coat. This material is very light in weight, it sheds dust readily, and it has a texture firm enough to lend itself, well to tailoring. THE CUSTOM WITH MOTOR HATS

The hat worn with it is of the sort best suited for wear with a motor coat, since the woman who motors no longer wears a motor hat recognizable as such. She wears, instead, a hat which fits snugly on, the head and which is, upon the removal of her veil, entirely suitable for street wear. Inis dark brown hat of lisere straw has for its sole trimming a gay red feather much like the breast of a bird.

It is interesting to note the growing use of a very fine quality of satin, which appears both in black and midnight blue in coats of the sort shown at the upper right of the page. Here again is a coat which has become a practical necessity in the wardrobe, for when the smart woman motors into town for luncheon, she chooses to cover her silk frock a wrap which, while not conspicuous, is neverthewhich, while not conspicuous, is nevertheless far semoved from the cloth top-coat which she wears with her serge or linen dresses. This particular coat comes in either the black of the blue satin and is cleverly cit in that it graduates in width from top to bottom. The width is worked in under the arms, so that the fulness is concentrated at the sides. The collars and culfs are very gay with their soft green satin overlaid with black and white striped chiffon. The lining repeats this idea in the patfon. The lining repeats this idea in the pat-tern of its black and white Georgette crêpe.

One of the smartest tam-o'-shanters of the season is worn with this coat, for there seems always to be a particular tamo'-shanter for each particular season. This model has a bandeau of a coarse straw in a basket weave. The velvet crown is a stiff one, with a seam along the outer edge; posed just underneath this crown, at the left side, is a gay rose, which serves as a note of color and tips the crown.

OF SATIN-TWO-TONED, OF COURSE

A most charming exponent of the soft silk wrap so excellent for evening wear during the summer is the cape-like model shown second from the upper right; it is made of a two-toned satin in all of the soft shades.

As though not charming enough in themselves transparent frocks must needs have underslips. This one is of pale pink silk and pale pink net: $13.75

The seam along the shoulder is outlined with a ruching of the taffeta; an armhole is cut at the end of this seam and then outlined again by this box-plaited ruche.

the most attractive features. A crochet

FROCKS, AND SLIPS FOR WEAR WITH THEM

There has been for some time an increasing demand among smart women for creasing demand among smart women for the sort of black evening frock that is illustrated second from the upper left on page 70. There is something very chic in an all-black evening frock as gauzy and transparent as this one, but for those to whom deep black is a little trying there is the smart compromise of the black over white feed is which the black is a wife white frock, in which the black is usually mounted over a white foundation which is seen but faintly under the many many is seen but faintly under the many many folds of tulle or lace which compose the extremely full skirts of the modish evening gown. The all-black dress in question here shows some Spanish influence. The skirt with its three ruffles, two of the tulle and a very deep one of delicate black lace, is distended at a point slightly below the hips, and although the materials of the skirt are very soft it gives somewhat the effect of the full and stiff Spanish skirt. The waist is composed of black tulle, with a touch of silver at the top of a very deep

The evening frock illustrated at the lower left on page 70 comes in a very delicate flesh color. The only bit of contrasting color appears in pipings of very narrow pale blue velvet which head the three ruffles at the bottom of the skirt, and in a soft rose used with two tones of blue in the narrow little velvet girdle. blue in the narrow little velvet girdle. The material of the dress is a flesh colored net, over which is hung a flounce of deli-cate flesh colored lace. The quaint bodice with its tiny full peplum is also made of

If one is to wear the very full frock of the season in any of the transparent mate-rials which are generally used for frocks of this sort, great care must be taken with of this sort, great care must be taken with the petticoat and underbodice. One of the most successful ways of handling this problem is a slip such as that shown at the lower right on page 70. This is espe-cially designed to wear with transparent frocks. It is made of flesh colored net over flesh colored silk, and the skirt is held out by a flexible hoop which may be easily removed if one wishes. The Possessor of a Limited Income Need Not Be the Possessor of a Limited Wardrobe, either in Smartness or Variety

THE difficulty in generalizing in regard to smart fashions for limited incomes is, of course, that the readers' ideas of limited incomes differ so widely. There are those who consider $5,000 a year, or less. extremely hard to meet, since the helpfulness of the department lies not only in suggesting what to buy, but where to buy it and what to pay for it. Vogue, therefore, will consider the question of smart fashions from two viewpoints: that of the woman who spends approximately $2,000 a year.

Vogue has submitted the designs on these pages to addressmakers, tailors, and milliners, whose names and addresses will be supplied on is request, and who will, in each instance, make up the models famous dressmakers in Paris and in New York.

At this time of year, one's thoughts turn naturally to the costume for the country. An extremely modern version of the ever popular Norfolk suit, a style essentially for country wear, is sketched at the lower right on this page. It would be smart developed either in white tipperary cloth or in rough serge, with oyster white pongee, stamped with blue, making the collar and revers. The original design of the pockets is particularly noteworthy. It is well to remark that any attempt at elaboration, as, for instance, trimming the

It's a smart idea, and a mercifully economical one, this of making collar and revers of a certain material, and covering the brim of one's hat with what remains of that material cuffs with pongee, would immediately cheapen this suit and give it the appearance of a ready-made costume. The relation of the hat to some feature of the relation of the hat to some leature of the suit or gown is always a happy one, and can be depended upon to produce that well thought out appearance so much to be desired. The matching sports hat might have its brim and the sides of its might have its brim and the sides of its crown covered with pongee, and the top of its crown covered with the serge or with tipperary cloth. Another excellent material for this suit would be skating cloth, which is light but warm, in Roman gold. If, in this latter case, one did not care for the blue and white pongee, stamped black and white material on the same order would be equally smart.

A well-known tailor will make this suit, supplying the materials, for $65, and a less known one for $515; a Fifth Avenue shop will make the hat for $20, and an up-town shop will make it for $10.

FOR AFTERNOON WEAR

A dignified suit for afternoon wear is sketched at the lower left on page 73. It would be particularly smart made in polka dotted polonaise, in the latest shade of chocolate brown, known as Maillard. The appliqué bañds and edging should be of the same material, and the collar of organdy in a lighter shade, stitched with black and white and finished with a fluttering bow of Maillard picot-edged taffeta ribbon. A well-known dressmaker, whose establishment is located in the center of the shopping district, will charge $35 to make this suit, if one supplies the material. The whole-sale price of the polonaise is $5,50 a yard. WITHIN VARIABLE LIMITS

A quaint yet exceedingly wearable gown is illustrated in the middle of page 73. It would be most effective if developed in black and biscuit color. The bodice may be of biscuit colored velardine (a material of the gabardine variety), edged with black taffeta; the underbodice, skirt, underskirt, and puffs of the sleeves all of the black taffeta, with a bit of the biscuit colored velardine on the pocket of the skirt. The buttons are covered with black taffeta, and a black taffeta bow falls from an embroidered white batiste collar. The frock would also be charming were the bodice made of blue taffeta edged with black ciré ribbon, the underbodice and underskirt of blue chiffon, and the overskirt of blue taffeta edged with black ribbon. In either combination and with all materials (Continued on page 126)

THE term "limited" as applied to income is open to a wide interpretation. To those women whose income is not too limited to prevent their competing on general lines with the best dressed of their sisters, the knowledge of shops where they may buy for thirty dollars the same type of hat upon which these latter are wont to expend some sixty dollars or more, should be of appreciable value. A visit to the establishment of Peggy Hoyt should do much toward adequate preparedness along these lines. Here, among other hats, may be found the two which are shown on this page. That at the top of the page is of black lisere straw and black satin. The trimming consists of black goura and bands of black cire ribbon. The hat on the figure at the bottom of the page is of pink taffeta, olack goura and bands of black cire ribbon. The hat on the figure at the bottom of the page is of pink taffeta, edged on the brim with flesh colored chiffon and trimmed with pink taffeta flowers. A prospective client, gifted with imagination or with a definite idea on the subject of modes, can hardly fail to draw inspiration from this riotous vision of color; and, eventually, with the aid of a sympathetic collaborator, she may evolve wonders in self-expression. On the other hand, those who have neither imagination nor defneither imagination nor def-inite ideas (and let us con-

A universal use of brillant colors is not counseled; on the contrary, their total unsuitability to certain types is emphasized. For these types there are other more mellow tone combinations and original materials, such as those phoof the Wardrobe Shop is the fact that it is managed by a woman who is a shopper of discrimination and who will shop innumerable hours to find the exact material to find the exact material desired. Another reason is that the shop expresses the point of view of common sense and enters a plea for comfort. From this shop comes a "Pinafore" dress, a quaint house gown of pink a quaint house gown of pink and white checked washable silk which is very charming. At the Wardrobe Shop were designed the negligée at the upper right, and the Span-ish gown at the upper left. The afternoon frock at the top of the page is from Jane Blaney.

NOTHING a YEAR SUPPORTS the COSTUME BLOUSE

The woman with nothing a year finds the "costume blouse" a practical necessity for wear with the separate skirt on occasions demanding a more elaborate type of waist than the tailored blouse. The effect of such a costume is that of a one-piece frock. Of this type are the three blouses on this page. The blouse at the extreme right is of gray faille. The ribbons, which are of ruby colored duvetyn, cross in a military fashion. The buttons are of gray bone. The waist at the left of the page has cuffs and belt of dark blue charmeuse. The middle section of the sleeves and the lower portion of the bodice is of white French crope stamped with a dark blue pattern. A smart summery alternative for this combination would be to make the top section, cuffs, and belt of white Gorgette or this combination would be to make the top section, cuffs, and belt of white do material for this type of tight-fitting blouse) and the remaining portion of white Georgette crope of plaid weave.

The blouse in the middle of the page is of black charmeuse and has a waistooat of lemon colored taffeta bound with a thin edge of Chinese red taffeta. The edges of the two small pocket slits, the buttons, and the grosgrain ribbon around the neck and sleeves are also Chinese red. These three costume blouses will be made by a dependable dress-maker for $2.8, inclusive of the materials, or if one wishes to supply her own materials each will be made by the same dress-maker for $10.

HAVE MADE THE FABULOUS COST OF TRUE PEARLS UNNECESSARY

You know, of course, that nothing in the world could be more exquisite than the deep sea pearl.

The Tecla Pearl itself is not more beautiful—that would be impossible—but it is equally beautiful, which is little short of a miracle.

It has the colorings, the orient, the water, and indeed all that opulent beauty of the true pearl, which is easier for the eye to distinguish than for language to define.

So much so, that women of light and leading, both here and abroad, wear Tecla Pearls freely, sometimes to supplement necklaces of Oriental Pearls, oftener to supplant them entirely.

Perceiving no difference between the true pearls and Tecla Pearls, what wonder that the World of Fashion shows a growing reluctance to pay the fabulous cost of true pearls, whose origin is a secret to all but the expert eye!

WHAT THEY READ

THE world has been robbed of what it could ill spare in the death of Henry James, on February 28, 1916. His work had shown no diminution of subtlety, force, or freshness; and, indeed, his very latest published essay, that which introduces the posthumous prose of a young British poet, illustrates to perfection his later and difficult style at its best. At the age of 73 he seemed as well fitted to go on with his work, critical or creative, as at each of the seemed as well fitted to go on with his work, critical or creative, as at and difficult style at its best. At the age of 73 he seemed as well fitted to go on with his work, critical or creative, as at any time within the last quarter-century of his productive activity. All the outward facts of Henry James's life could be put into a hundred words. His sole adventures were intellectual and emotional. He and his younger brother William, the distinguished pragmatist, exquisite stylist, and one of the best-beloved of men, were sons of Henry James, a brilliant Unitarian and later Swedenborgian theologian and author, and grandsons of a wealthy merchant of Albany, New York. Henry, born in New York City in 1843, was educated privately at home and in Europe until he entered the Harvard Law School in 1862. He neglected law for letters, and, by 1866, was contributing to the magazines. Within the next fifty years he published almost an equal number of volumes. His only popular novel, "Daisy Miller," published in 1879, gave him a general fame which he took no trouble to cultivate. He wrote to please himself, and because of this lost those of trouble to cultivate. He wrote to please himself, and because of this lost those of himself, and because of this lost those of his earlier readers who could not adjust themselves to the increasing subtlety of his style. He retained, however, a relatively small but faithful company of those who deeply enjoyed the work of an exacting master, and many people who posed as intellectual felt that the reading of Henry Lynnes gave them the field posed as intellectual felt that the reading of Henry James gave them the final authentic mark as such. Although Henry James was familiar with Paris and wrote French with the assurance and charm of a native, he was, above all, a lover of the English-speaking peoples, and after a residence of more than half of his life in Great Britain he resourced his American. Great Britain, he renounced his American citizenship last year in order to become a British subject.

For the past twenty years or more it has been the fashion to ridicule the later style of Henry James, and his book on impressions of this country in 1905 fashion that seemed to justify the sconful. For the most part, however, even the later books of Mr. James demand of the ample patience. He commended himselespecially to highly intellectual men and women. His contemporaries in the field of letters, from Stevenson to the men of to-day, have loyally and cheerfully acknowledged his mastery of English, although Stevenson stated a wish that James would expend his exquisite broideries upon more important subjects. This criticism by Stevenson will appeal to many people who do not fully apply to literature the old maxim of the Academie des Beaux-Arts, "Paint anything."

Amazing as are Mr. James's performances, the world will probably settle down to the judgment, not only that his later style at times demanded too much of the reader, but that he unconsciously gave the measure of his narrower dimensions the measure of his narrower dimensions by some of the subjects upon which he expended so great a wealth of thought, skill, and invention.

LETTERS FROM AMERICA, by RUPERT BROOKE, enjoys the rare distinction of an introductory essay by Henry James, and it is the very last volume that will be so distinguished. Happily for those who enjoy Mr. James at his best, ripest, and richest, and who fear not the highly rewarding roll defear not the highly rewarding roll defear not the highly rewarding roll defear not the highly rewarding toil de-manded for full understanding of whatmanded for full understanding of whatever is written in that later marvelous but baffling style of his, this essay, which was evidently inspired by the warmest appreciation of the young poet, runs to full essay length and is likely to take its place among his most valued critical expressions. As usual, it has many sentences which are difficult because of the author's scrupulous care to say neither more nor less than he means and to say just what he means with urbanity and charm; but for the clear-headed reader who is accustomed to Mr. James, it has no unyielding obscurities. It is the more interesting as showing us the remore interesting as showing us the re-cently naturalized Briton's delight in the centry naturalized Briton's delight in the amenities, the traditions, the glories of English life that led him finally to renounce his American citizenship for the lower political status of the British monarch's subject; and, indeed, for those Americans who know and love the Mother Isle at her best, this essay is Mr. James's best apology for a step that his countrymen can not but regret.

The book itself goes far to disprove Hazlett's indictment of the poets as ineffective writers of prose. Rupert Brooke's prose is melodious without a hint of technically poetic rhythm, rich and varied in vocabulary, etherealized by imagination, and lit with humor. No matter for the young poet's fatuous belief that his visits to New York and Boston had shown him the entire United States: no matter for his natural loneli-The book itself goes far to disprove Boston had shown him the entire United States; no matter for his natural loneliness in the presence of the Canadian wilderness, so unsympathetic, at first sight, to the town-bred even on this side of the Atlantic; in spite of these things, and of the youthful certainty of it all, his impressions of New York, Boston, Niagara, Montreal, Ottawa, Winnipeg, and the prairies and mountains of our great neighbor to the north are preciously worth having. His letters on New York, Boston, and Niagara spur him to his best; the Saguenay and the Canadian Rockies left him cold. On the whole this is a volume of highly distinguished prose. TALES OF TO-DAY

TALES OF TO-DAY

THE BELFRY, by May Sinclair, takes its name from that noble tower that dominates the old market-place of Bruges, which name, although accidental and external to the story, was chosen, doubtless, to relate it to the war in Flanders. Miss Sinclair concerns herself mainly with a single character. The story is told autobiographically, and the narrator poses as a man. In order to make the pose specious, Miss Sinclair has attempted to adopt an intensely masculine style based upon that of Rudyard Kipling in his audacious youth, and the result is not always convincing. It remains for psychologists to tell us why so many able women in literature have posed as men, while so few able men have posed as men, while so few able men have posed as momen. Through the profanity and strut of Miss Sinclair's style in "The Belfry" one detects the posing woman, as one recognizes the unmistakable feminine contour through the coat and trousers of the girl masquerading in male attire. In method of narrative, in deft trousers of the girl masquerading in male attire. In method of narrative, in deft indication, in implication of character, indication, in implication of character, in atmosphere, and in movement, the story has unusual distinction. Jevons, the vulgar, the material, the meretricious, the professed coward, but the enthralling talker and writer, is a new and not impossible character. The narrator is nothing in particular, above all things not a male in particular, above all things not a male of the human species, while the chief woman is well enough indicated; the charm of Bruges is made apparent, and the close of Canterbury Cathedral, with its well-bred denizens, becomes a living, breathing presence. All the while, however, the story is marred by the specious and spurious masculinity of the style, and, of course, Miss Sinclair can not escape her accustomed obsession of sex. In spite of its limitations, "The Belfry" must be recognized as one of the notable novels of the current season. (New York: The Macmillan Company; $1.35 net.)

CLIPPED WINGS, by RUPERT HUGHES, tells the familiar tale of the actress who deserts the stage for domestic life with the man she loves and later yearns to return to the dazzle of the footlights. There is much more in "Clipped Wings" than the mere story of Miss Kemble, for we have strongly realistic scenes in a small university city of the middle west, bits of Chicago, and a great deal of New York. By far the larger part of the story is concerned with the great deal of New Tork. By lar the larger part of the story is concerned with the folk of the stage and their profession; and perhaps the most effectively wrought character is Reben, the manager. There is a vast deal of rapid and not unconvinc-ing dialogue, and there are individual scenes and chapters that read like short stories, so rapidly and dramatically are they told, and so complete are they in they told, and so complete are they in themselves. One of the best of these chapters is the struggle between the manager and his intended star. As to genuine passion, there is little or none, and few characters except that of the manager are more than cleverly "roughed out." The interest of the story for most readers will lie in its detailed depiction of that fascinating unknown world behind the scenes. If some frank and discriminating friend had been employed by Mr. Hughes to go over his manuscript with a relentless blue pencil and delete nearly all the banalities intended for the author's wit, wisdom, and poetry, the author's wit, wisdom, and poetry, the novel would have carried less the stamp of the ambitious commonplace. (New York: Harper & Brothers; $1.35 net.)

THE IMMORTAL GYMNASTS, by MARIE CHER, intrudes into the mingled crude romanticism and bald realism of much current fiction with an ethereal lightness and sweetness of fancy, like the delicious breath of the fleeting and uncertain New England spring, and uncertain New England spring. and uncertain New England spring, between the harshness of winter and the dry heats of summer. Miss Cher's opening chapter introduces us most charmingly to the exiled Pantaloon, Harlequin, and Columbine, heavenly guests once of Italy, then of France, and, at last, of damp Britain, where they set up their rest in a tiny brick house such as one finds in rows upon rows tucked away in long streets of old London. The three masouerade successfully as human beings masquerade successfully as human beings in quaint human occupations, and Pantaloon's sensitive perceptions enable him to catch the lines of a human romance him to catch the lines of a human romance which is the main story of the book. If you love London, if you love wild fancy, if you love clean romance, if you love the idealism which sets love itself above wealth and title, respectability and convention, you will certainly enjoy this very unusual bit of fiction. Let it be whispered by way of postscript that Miss Cher, who writes so charmingly, should learn that we do not marry "individuals," but men or women; and that the auxiliaries "would" and "should" have lingering distinctions that are still worthy of respect. (New York: George H. Doran Company; $1.25 net.)

JOHN BOGARDUS, by GEORGE AGNEW CHAMBERLAIN, is the author's third novel, and an extremely mild variant of the eternal "Don Juan." Mr. Chamberlain's hero is a youth who wanders the world and learns life by loving, first, a mere child whom he befriends at need; next, a charming country girl; then, an inflexible Puritan; and, at length, one whom he half believes to be his child love grown to womanhood. With the end of this last and most educative romance, John calmly returns to his abandoned vocation as a teacher of languages. As usual, Mr. Chamberlain makes his story usual, Mr. Chamberlain makes his story an opportunity for taking us to many parts of the globe, and showing us a variety of interesting minor adventures and subordinate dramatis personæ. As to John's love making, it is never gross and it is always successful in drawing avowal from the beloved. It was carrally blameless until the final passion came. "Home," the author's first tale, in spite of its manifest crudities of form, seemed to hold promise of an indefinitely brilliant of its manifest crudities of form, seemed to hold promise of an indefinitely brilliant future. "Through Stained Glass" did not redeem the promise, though it proved the author's variety. "John Bogardus" has some things better than are found in either of the other stories, but on the whole it suggests that the author has pretty definitely given us his measure, and that the indefinite promise of "Home, is never to be realized. WAYS OF HUMAN PROGRESS

THE WAY OF MARTHA AND THE WAY OF MARY, by STEPHEN GRAHAM, attempts a further interpretation of the author's beloved Russia for the benefit of the benighted west. Mr. Graham, an intense mystic, familiarly acquainted with the ideals of his native England, a recent visitor to the United States, and long a resident of Russia, has no hesitation in preferring oriental to occidental Christianity, occidental Christianity, pure mysticism to the practicality and efficiency of the western world, especially to the ordered efficiency of Germany and to the abounding materialism, as he sees it, of the United States. Perhaps Mr. Graham intended, in this brilliantly written and rarely interesting volume, to reconcile after some fashion materialism and mysticism, but he is far mysticism, but he is far from succeding in any such attempt. He does manage, however, to pre-sent in a startling fashion what he believes to be the meaning of Russian mys-ticism. He shows us the church, the market, the tavern, the monasteries, tavern, the monasteries, the Russian people, in their various relations. A chapter on Tolstoy applauds the mighty mystic's final flight, yet justifies his long endurance of domestic conditions at war with his professed philosophy. By way of his professed philosophy. By way of prosecuting his studies in mysticism, Mr. Graham visited monasteries in Africa, and Graham visited monasteries in Africa, and not the least significant part of his book is that which recounts his adventures in those regions. "To the Greeks, foolishness," is the text that will rise to the lips of many who read Mr. Graham's book. Such appeared the preaching of primitive Christianity to those "gay, light-hearted masters of the wave," and such must appear the mystical philosophy of Mr. Graham to many who agree with him in condemning the prevalent materialism of the occident. To the ordinary materialist, the money-making kind of American business man, for example,—perhaps, indeed, to most sane thinkers,—some of Mr. Graham's utterances would seem to justify a judicial inquiry into his sanity and his right to be at large. (The Macmillan Company; $2 net.)

THE CHILD IN HUMAN PROGRESS, by George Henry Payne, with a foreword by the eminent Doctor A. Jacobi, traces rapidly, but in sufficient detail, the treatment of children in many nations and under successive civilizations, from the earliest periods revealed by written records and trustworthy tradiwritten records and trustworthy tradi-tion to the present time. The story is one full of hideous cruelty, but lighted throughout by the instinctive, unshakable, self-forgetful love of mothers for their children. In this was the beginning, as the author believes, of genuine civilization, of sweet and kindly human relations, of the influences that have given fatherhood its high place, albeit far below that of mothermign place, albeit lar below that of mother-hood, in our modern life. Almost every-where early peoples slew children at times of economic hardship, though Egyptian civilization five thousand years before Christ was almost exempt from this hide-tow, blot. The girl body, was multipled. ous blot. The girl-baby was ruthlessly destroyed in many instances after the ancient Greeks had reached their highest point in civilization as measured by their skill, taste, and power in the fine arts. The practise continues in China, but has reluctantly yielded in India at the insistence of the British. As to the cruelty involved in child labor, it actually became more pronounced in the late eighteenth and early nineteenth centuries under the factory system of Great Britain than it had been three centuries earlier. Public awakening to the cruelties and economic waste involved in child labor was clayered to fift. labor was slow, and the effective protection of children from overwork is far from reached as yet, even in this country.

Mr. Payne's book, with its many curious illustrations, is likely to interest others besides those active in the promotion of the current promotion of the current movement for the better protection of children. When shall we have a parallel study of the cruelties, not necessarily physical, to which chil-dren have been and are dren have been and are now subjected through false theories of education, of training, of discipline, and of religious instruction and practise? BACKWARD CHILDREN, by ARTHUR HOLMES, of the Pennsylvania State College, a volume in the "Childhood and Youth Series" under the general editorship of Professor M. V. O'Shea of the University of Wiscossin undertakes to preconsin, undertakes to pre

consin, undertakes to present in popular language what many scientific observers have discovered as to the significance of retardation in the intellectual development of children. Any one can read Professor Holmes's book with pleasure and interest, and parents may well give it careful attention, for acquaintance with what he has to say may enable them to save their children from moral and intellectual shipwreck. The author carefully distinguishes between author carefully distinguishes between various forms of backwardness in children, various forms of backwardness in children, and he presents a classification of defectives that is likely to be of value to both parents and teachers. Of course, like all the men of the Wisconsin school, Professor Holmes, though a Pennsylvanian, holds strongly by the current belief that greatly stresses heredity in the matter of the incurably defective. As to others, he holds out hopes for their arrival at normality through proper treatment, sometimes surgical, sometimes through the mality through proper treatment, sometimes surgical, sometimes through the treatment of teeth or eyes, sometimes through manual training, sometimes by means of intelligent approach on the emotional or intellectual side. Professor Holmes has written a valuable book for popular use, but he has now and then promitted thought for the proper surgical training the property of the prope permitted himself to fall into rather cheap permitted himself to fall into rather cheap forms of expression, intended apparently to catch the popular ear, while he is once betrayed into the patent exaggeration of saying that "a broken-down instep seems to indicate a broken-down mind." There must be many thousands of normal children with broken-down insteps, or flatfoot, as there are certainly thousands of normal adults in that condition (Indianapolis: The Bobbs-Merrill Company; $1 net.)

came the agitation through which that germ was slowly developed into the full-grown plant of pure democracy. Professor Barnett finds that popular legislation in Oregon has not realized all the hopes of its friends but has fulfiled few of its enemies' evil prognostications. It has been used at times for selfish interests; it has seemed somewhat ill-fitted for dealing with complicated projects of law marked by much technical detail; the method of bringing about the initiative by means of petitions placed in the hands of persons paid to obtain signatures has been seriously misused; the cost of initiating some laws has been great; the system, while educative, has at times made excessive demands upon the attention and intelligence of voters; while statistics show that the election of officers rather than the enactment of laws has strongly moved the popular electorate, so that many measures have had far less votes than were accorded to officers chosen at the time such measures were enacted, and not a few measures of the system as well as friends think that the people have exercised their powers of direct legislation remarkably well. Direct legislation has lessened party spirit, but the direct primary has done more to further this end. In spite of lingering opposition and bitter criticism, the principle of direct legislation is pretty generally accepted as a sound and successful settled institution. As to the recall, the conclusion of the author is that it must be regarded as yet unproved. Professor Barnett has treated his subject comprehensively, without tedious detail, and seemingly in a fair spirit. (New York: The Macmillan Company; $2.)

FROM THE BATTLE FRONT

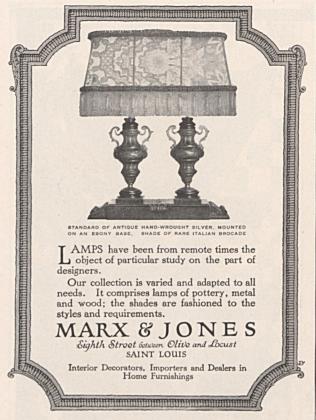

VIVE LA FRANCE! by E. ALEXANDER POWELL, gives, perhaps, the liveliest impression of the war as seen along the French front of any book that has yet appeared. Mr. Powell went abroad as the correspondent of a New York newspaper, an American magazine, and a London newspaper. Through influence, he tells us, he was enabled to visit the French lines, and to travel about in the war zone, privileges denied to nearly all other civilians. He tells of all these things with the intelligence of a trained observer and with a restraint of statement and phrase that gives an impressive dignity to his volume. One can not read what Mr. Powell has written, however, without a growing sense of the insanity of war, and one gathers that Mr. Powell himself shares this feeling. The marvelous certainty with which, upon learning their news, the French artillerymen drop deadly projectiles upon those trenches, is a revelation to the civilian. So, too, is the operation of the binocular, which fixes a soaring aeroplane and records its exact height. Two things will stand out for most readers: the account of the shelling of Dunkirk by a German taube far over-head and by a German naval gun twenty-three miles away, and that of the Battle of Champagne. This last account occupies many pages, and is done with an impressive and awful clearness. The hospital scenes, mercifully brief, are also unforgetable. Mr. Powell's illustrations are not fancy sketches, but very revealing photographs taken in the trenches and upon the battlefields. (New York: Charles Scribner)

THE SPIRIT OF FRANCE, by OWEN JOHNSON, republished letters originally contributed to an American magazine, gives the fresh and lively impressions of a keen yet sympathetic observer who knows well how to communicate such impressions to his readers in a breezily popular style. Mr. Johnson lived, when a child, in France, and, by an unexplained miracle, he still retains enough spoken French to communicate with Parisians and not set them into gales of laughter. His, let it be noted, is the only recorded instance of the kind. Mr. Johnson's embarrassing load of early French did not prevent him from seeing, feeling, and enjoying like a sound American all that the fighting French had to show him. He seems to have risked his life in the trenches and amid the ruins of cities under bombardment, and with the modesty now the recognized cachet (he will understand) of the war correspondent, he confesses that he was afraid. This war, so nearly fatal to the war correspondent's business, has been absolutely fatal to the hero correspondents. All, with one accord, smilingly proclaim their funk in the presence of bursting shells and flying shrapnel. Mr. Johnson saw enough to make what Mr. Greeley was accustomed to call "mighty interesting reading," and he interviewed the great Joffre in his native tongue, unalloyed by banal Ollendorfian inquiries for the whereabouts of his grandmother's pretty slippers. Why does not the excellent Johnson translate his delicious Lawrenceville stories into his own personal and particular French? They would thus be funnier in translation than in the original, and there is no higher praise than this. (Boston: Little, Brown and Company; $1.35 net.)

THE HEEL OF WAR, by GEORGE B. McCLELLAN, a brief discussion of conditions as the author reports that he found them in Germany, Belgium, France, and Italy, during the last six months of 1915, will be pretty generally accepted as a document in support of the Teutonic cause. It is well to have an intelligent American's views on the momentum squestion of the European war, however he may dissent from the conceptions of his fellow citizens. Germany, Mr. McClellan found apparently suffering less in all respects from the war than France or England, although he does not give any respects from the war than France of England, although he does not give any chapter of his book to the last named country, and apparently made no careful study of conditions there. It is a little surprising to learn that the country that gave us the "Hymn of Hate" and in which a naval commander was decorated by his Emperor for destroying the Luciania a nava commander was decorated by his Emperor for destroying the Lustiania with the lives of many hundred innocent persons, hates England less than England hates her. As to Belgium, Mr. McClellan finds the German rule there excellent, and persons, hates England less than Englanhates her. As to Belgium, Mr. McClellan finds the German rule there excellent, and, on the surface, benevolent. He furnishes four mutually inconsistent Belgian accounts of what the Germans did at Louvain, and he puts side by side with them the German account, leaving the reader to compare all five and believe which and what he may. For the heroism of the French people the author has the warmest admiration, but he criticizes the now fallen Viviani ministry—as a despotism regardless of the constitution. He thinks General Joffre the radical associate of the radical clique ruling France, though pro-Germans here are whispering that Joffre is a reactionary and likely to aid in a restoration of monarchy in France. Italy, Mr. McClellan thinks, was forced against the popular will into a war that may or may not bring her glory. The author of this little book, so strongly pro-German in all ist implications, must not be surprised if some of his fellow Americans whose sympathies are on the other side, whise they may neglect to remind him that his father failed to crush the Confederacy and in 1864 ran for President against Lincoln, can not forget that Mr. McClellan himself was a somewhat complaisant Tammany congressman and a Tammany mayor of New York. although those who are there are glad to see one, they are preoccupied, and the visitor soon feels his presence to be an encumbrance upon them. I have one American friend who has lived abroad for years and has a delightful home in England. He refused to come over here, as so many others did, when the war broke out; and now he is like a wandering shade in Hades. I was almost persuaded last year to go over and look in on some of my to go over and look in on some of my English friends, but he wrote me with a positiveness not to be gainsaid, "Stay where you are." This man is just beyond the age limit for service; his club is de-serted; and when, now and then, men do come back for a short furlough, these men who have been his old cronics are miles away from him in spirit and interests.

After six months of country life and bridge with dowagers and elderly maidens,—for all his own women friends are busy with hospital work or as volunteer nurses at the front,—he found English life getting on his nerves. After four days life getting on his nerves. After four days spent in running to the embassy, to the photographer, and heavens knows where all, and getting his passports viséed, he set off for neutral Switzerland. It took five days to reach Vevay and, of course, he was obliged to stop all along the way and go through more red tape and vexatious delays. From Montreux he wrote me; I have the letter "owert par Pauthorité militaire." It took six weeks to get to New York, though there was absolutely no war information in it. "I find Switzerland dull," he states, "and am leaving for Paris next month, en route for England. I expect to be back in my home

True, it is still possible to go over and look up old friends on the other side, but, to have American passports or French passports viséed just before leaving, and the consulates are so crowded that it takes hours. The only train to Paris leaves here at nine-sixteen in the evening and I shall have to spend about three hours at the frontier, standing about in a shed, in the middle of the night. If I am lucky, I shall arrive in Paris about ten-thirty the next morning." Then he tells me that he is obliged to cut this or that man because he is on the opposing side,— that is, on the side opposed to his English friends and to the country of his adoption. If he should even nod to them, he would be sent to Coventry and, moreover, bebe sent to Coventry and, moreover, become an object of suspicion, for Switzerland is crowded not only with English people and Americans, but also with Germans and Austrians. A man hardly dare attempt to be neutral.

The women, however, are having the time of their lives. Their errand of mercy is recognized. It is a feminist year as far as non-combatants are concerned. It is hard to stand by and not take a hand; the unthinking put us down for "slackers," and not all our certainty of justification can quite keep us from feeling the accusation. Still there is plenty for a man to do. tion. Still there is plenty for a man to do. He may be a man for a' that and yet not rush out to pot an enemy. There are so many sides to this vital question of pre-paredness. There are politics, the science of government, many important matters to study, and difficult problems to solve. So for the moment, we may take to the peaceful pastoral life—just while we are getting ready. Only we must look out that the women do not get ahead upon the souls of its audience by the very upon the souls of its audience by the very intensity and brilliance of its poetic fire? At once passionately beautiful, madly gay, and pitifully sad, it showed every artistic attribute of great music, inspired painting, or imaginative writing. It is only now, and in New York, it seems, that the accepted virtues of the fine arts become the accepted virtues of the fine arts become vices when they are found on the stage. If we could only bring the matter to the proof, perhaps we could determine definitely just where to put the blame for the expulsion of Beauty from the stage. Fortunately for the continuance of this essay, we have just been tested and are soon to be tested again. Romance, imagination, beauty, all the qualities which our plays lack, have lately been offered to us in a new guise.

In its individual dancers, the Russian Ballet had nothing extraordinary to offer us. At the last moment its stars, Nijinus. At the last moment its stars, Nijin-sky and Karsavina, failed to materialize. sky and Karsavina, failed to materialize. In fact, the press was unanimous in awarding the highest prize to Lopokova, a dancer whose personality had been familiar to New York for several seasons. When to this is added the fact that the Pullet had head playing facility. seasons. When to this is added the fact that the Ballet had been playing for six years in Europe, it is easy to see that novelty was not a leading factor in whatever success the Ballet attained. In the past, moreover, the Century Theatre, at which the dancers fulfilled their two weeks' engagement, had shown itself to be a huge mausoleum, from which the lifeless remains of each theatrical venture were soon removed to a less ostentatious resting-place.

Undaunted by these adverse circum-stances, the Ballet opened; and, as if to add one more difficulty to those which already confronted it, charged opera prices. For the first few nights, the audi-torium was little more than half-filled.

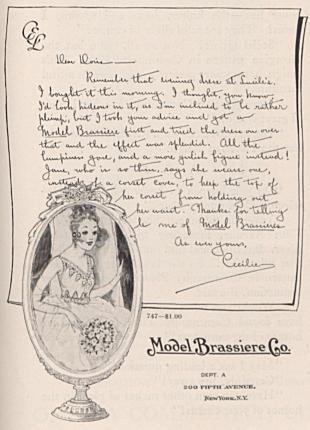

Novelty and curiosity once more showed themselves to be much over-rated press-agents. Then slowly but inevitably, the attendance increased. The entire last week was a "sell-out." It is always difficult—even dangerous—

It is always difficult—even dangerous— to analyze the causes of a success in New York. It is best simply to describe it. What were the ballets? They were sim-ple fairy-stories for the most part, where there was any story,—a tale of enchant-ment, a tragedy in which the hero and heroine are dolls, a glimpse of the Ara-bian Nights, a flash of Greek mythology, and all were presented before a background puan Nights, a flash of Greek mythology, and allwere presented before a background of shifting figures, riotous colors, and the strange careful discords of the modern composers. All were sheer beauty, imagination, the conceptions of a poet's mind. In a few weeks, a famous actor will return to New York for his farewell performance—not an inferious return and man.

return to New York for his farewell performance,—not an infrequent event nor an unusual one, unfortunately, but, in this case, a peculiarly interesting one. Mr. E. H. Sothern has spoken of making his final appearance in "If I Were King," by Justin Hunrley McCarthy, a play about François Villon, a poet, written by another poet; and that is the interesting part of it. If Mr. Sothern appears as Villon it will be the second test, as the Russian Ballet was the first; and if the Public God receives the beauty of it and loves it as he once did, we may yet hurl loves it as he once did, we may yet hurl the lie in the teeth of the manager who tells us that we do not want beauty and imagination, and may cease to say, in paraphrase of Villon himself:

Alas for beauty! Year by year Alas for beauty! Tear by year.
Our players cast it far away.
Where are the plays we once held dear?
Where the Romance of yesterday?

Fifth Avenue Decorator says Community Plate is Supplanting Solid Silver in the Homes of Wealthy New Yorkers

HE following interview with Mr.F—, interior decorator for L—&Co., Fifth Avenue, New York City, gives the facts in regard to some very wealthy New Yorkers. It also indicates, we believe, the modern trend in silverware buying.

THE INTERVIEW*

"I am told, Mr. F—, that you do interior decorating for the 'New York smart set.'"

"You might call them that. But 'smart set' is a rather indefinite term, isn't it? My clients are people of wealth and social position, if that is what you mean."

"Suppose we drop 'smart set' then. Could I say that as an interior decorator you have access to many homes of wealth?"

"Yes. That is entirely true."

"The furniture in such homes is remarkable, I suppose?"

"Occasionally it is extraordinary. For instance, the dining room alone in Mrs. H. L. B—'s home in Park Avenue contains a collection of Sheraton and Chippendale furniture valued at $50,000."

"What is the table service in Mrs. B-'s house like—the knives, forks and spoons, I mean? They are solid silver of course?"

"Solid silver? Not at all. She has the Georgian pattern in Community Plate. This design harmonizes perfectly with her beautiful furniture."

"Have you seen Community in other homes of great wealth?"

"Yes, in Mrs. E.C—'s in Riverside Drive. She has the Patrician design."

"Do you happen to know why Mrs. C—selected Community Plate?"

"Yes—she told me. She went to Y—'s in Fifth Avenue, intending to buy solid table silver. But she could find nothing in solid silver that suited her. So she bought the Patrician pattern in Community Plate. It had greater distinction, she said."

"Would you mind telling me whether you have found Community Plate in still other homes of the same sort?"

"Yes, often."

"May I ask a leading question?"

"Certainly, fire away!"

"Have you seen other makes of plate in the homes of your clients?"

"Yes, Sheffield Plate."

"Excuse me, I did not refer to such things as platters and serving plates. I meant plated spoons, knives and forks."

"I cannot at present recall any. Community was all I saw."

本 本 本

"That is interesting. Have you yourself, Mr. F—, any theory to account for Community Plate being so popular among the very wealthy?"

"Yes, it is the beautiful purity of the Community designs. The era of the ornate is past. People of wealth no longer seek the most expensive materials in furnishing their houses. Look at the present vogue of Sheffield Plate, for instance. What such people want is distinction. Now, the Community Designs-"

"Have this necessary distinction?"

"Precisely! And that is why Community Plate today is found in so many of the most exclusive homes."

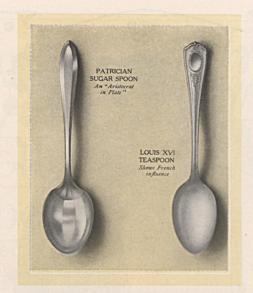

Whether one rejoices in a dining room furnished with veritable pieces by Chippendale, Hepplewhite, Adam or Sheraton; or cunningly secures her effects with the more accessible furniture of today— the "Patrician," "Sheraton," "Georgian" and "Louis XVI" Community Plate distinctly belong.

FOR THE HOSTESS

EVEN those hostesses who have observed Lent most rigidly are free at Easter to give fresh thought to entertaining. In April, so many delicious things are on the market that the planning of the Easter dinner should not be difficult, but perhaps a suggestion or two may not come amiss-should one have begun the day with a delectable breakfast of croquettes of shad roe, garnished with crisply curled bacon, bouquets of parsley, and sections of lemon, accompanied by puffy popovers or golden cornbread, then the following menu would be appropriate and give a springtime air to the dinner.

Clam Cocktails Potage de Printemps Broiled Brook Trout Hothouse Cucumbers

Broiled Spring Lamb Steak, Sauce Béarnaise
Pommes Soufflées Asparagus à la Normande
French Artichokes, Hollandais
Strawberries, Surprise
Coffee

A drop or so of onion juice adds much to the clam cocktails, if just enough is used to give that elusive flavor which leaves a doubt in one's mind as to whether it can really be onion. The potage dr printemps has the merit of being entirely novel as well as really delicious. To make this, a half-bunch of watercress, finely minced, three or four sliced Bermuda potatoes, and thin slices of the white stalks of half a dozen leeks should be fried together in a generous amount of butter, in a white enamel saucepan, and over a moderate fire. Meanwhile, a quart of rich milk should be heated in a double boiler. When the sliced potatoes and leeks are quite tender, they should be added to the hot milk, seasoned with salt, pepper, a lump of butter, and, if one so desires, a little paprika, and when well blended, they should be rubbed through a purée sieve. The potatoes should thicken the broth ever so slightly. Croutons may be added if one chooses, and the broth should be served in cups. Or, for the sake of variety, the soup may be served without being strained.

TROUT FOR EPICURES AND OTHERS

Brook trout are at their best in April, when the crystal waters of the brooks, just released from their icy imprisonment, are pure and unpolluted. The flesh of the fish is firmer, the coloring more brilliant, and the flavor finer than at any other time in the year. A little maître d'hôtel butter and a bit of lemon are the only accompaniments permissible for a broiled trout. The hothouse cucumbers, crisp and cool, are served with the simplest of French dressings, though, if one prefers, this dressing may be of vinegar and salt, without oil.

While still upon the subject of trout, a secret may be whispered, ever so softly so that the epicures may not be offended—those epicures who affirm that a broiled trout is the only trout worth eating. Perhaps they have never partaken of truite au bleu, as served in Switzerland or in the little hotels of the French Alps around Aix-les-Bains and Chambéry. But that is another story, for—this is the secret—the really delectable trout is neither broiled nor au bleu, but simply fried. Let epicures throw up their hands in horror if they will, but then let them try a trout prepared in this fashion. The trout should be split, washed, and, with the heads and tails left on, laid in iced water until ready for use. The

The trout should be split, washed, and, with the heads and tails left on, laid in iced water until ready for use. The eight-inch trout is considered the best size for this, for the smaller fish are more delicately flavored. Several slices of fat salt pork should be fried until crisp; the fat should then be poured very carefully into another hot frying pan, leaving the sediment of salt in the bottom of the first pan. An equal quantity of melted butter is then added to this fat. The trout should be removed from the water, lightly dried in a towel, and rolled in fine Indian meal until well covered on both sides. They are then laid most carefully in the hot fat and fried on one side, then painstakingly turned and fried on the other, and when golden brown, they are served on a platter with watercress. The trout need no garniture, unless one wishes to surround them with the crisp slices of pork and some curls of bacon. Seasoned simply with salt and pepper and eaten with baked potatoes, they are one of the best offerings America can lay on the altar of epicurianism.

TO MAKE SAUCE BEARNAISE

To return to the Easter dinner: the spring lamb steak should be sliced to the desired thickness and broiled. The distinctive touch of the dish is its Béarnaise sauce. Once one serves this with lamb steak, it will be found an indispensable adjunct of the steak thereafter. As to the making of the sauce, it is simplicity itself. A gill of equal parts of vinegar and water is put into a saucepan with a half-teaspoonful of finely minced onion and a few tarragon leaves and cooked, tightly covered, until reduced to half its quantity. Then it should be taken from the fire and, when cool, mixed with the well-beaten yolks of four eggs, after which it should be seasoned with salt and mignonette pepper and returned to the fire. Three ounces of melted butter should be added slowly, and the mixture should be stirred constantly until it thickens to the consistency of mayonnaise. Then it is strained through a fine sieve and a teaspoonful of chopped tarragon leaves and one of chopped parsley are added.

Not every one dares essay pommes souffiées, for though they are not really beyond the province of the average cook, their preparation requires great care. Sometimes, indeed, one must try several times before the trick is accomplished, for their preparation is one of the tricks of the culinary trade. But the oval souffies of tempting brownness are their own reward for the labor expended.

ward for the labor expended.

Irish potatoes should be cut in oval pieces, about two inches long by one inch wide, and then sliced lengthwise, so that the slices may be about half an inch in thickness. They are then put in a bowl of water with a large lump of ice for twenty-five minutes. Meantime, two pans of frying fat should be made ready, one, barely hot, on the edge of the range, the other so hot as to reach the "blue smoke stage. The potatoes are dried in a towel, then put into a frying basket, and cooked in the cooler fat until tender. They are then removed, placed on a sieve to drain and dry a bit, when they should be returned to the frying basket and plunged into the hot fat. As they are stirred about, they will begin to swell, or souffer, and puff up to twice their size. They should be removed and allowed to drain, and then dusted with salt and served piping hot.

piping hot.

One of the delicacies of spring is asparagus, and it is particularly delicious cooked in the Norman fashion. The tenderest stalks are selected and, tips and all, are cut in pieces about half an inch long. The tough white part, of course, is not used. The asparagus is cooked in salted water until tender and carefully drained in a colander. Then it is put in an enameled saucepan with a generous lump of butter and some rich cream heated until the cream crinkles, seasoned with salt and pepper, and served very hot. Strawberries Surprise have the virtue of heing as easily prepared as they are.

MINIATURE SHOPS FOR THE DIMINUTIVE POCKET

T was once the invariable custom for a smart woman who desired a touch of individuality in her wardrobe or her surroundings to turn to gay shops of foreign cities. There the gay shops of folding thes. There she found trained minds and hands ready to express her own personality, whatever its quirks and kinks, in a manner suited its quirks and kinks, in a manner suited to the latest fashion.

Then came the war, and the handmaidens of Vienna, of Rome, and of Paris were scattered to the four winds. In New York, to be sure, there were Parisian shops aplenty, but could they supply laces, embroideries, potteries, or paintings of the old-world specialty shop? Any one who looked for them to do it then knows the answer. But the passing of a little time changed this. Gradually, tiny specialty shops raised their timid heads; one by one they were discovered by patrons slimmer than the average, taller than the average, or perhaps more taller than the average, or perhaps more fond than the average of the new and distinguishing in decoration.

OLD JEWELS IN NEW SETTINGS

Some one came from Italy, where she had studied jewelry making, and settled modestly in a little studio on a side street. She wondered whether Americans would appreciate her hand-made jewelry, but she did not wonder long in silence Dut she did not wonder long in silence.
Americans came in a steady stream and showered their jewels upon her. "Take them," they commanded, "from their

into your marvelous designs."

For one admiring customer she wrought a long chain of amber beads linked together with two-inch bars of bright enamel on copper, and for this inimitable bit her price was $100. To match an imported gown made of dahlia velvet she designed a bag. Its round top of hammered silver was set with moonstones, and chains of silver and moonstones hung in loops over was set with monisones, and chains of silver and moonstones hung in loops over the sides of the bag. Its price—but then the jewels belonged to the owner of the bag, so the price can not be told. On another black silk bag, the silver top is set with large squares of lapis lazuli; this is priced at $80.

An Armenian jeweler who has a lavishly appointed shop filled with antiques has made a daisy pin to be worn with diaphanous summer gowns; it has opal petals and a pearl center. The price of this is $65. Another of his interesting creations is a round piece of carved jade set in antique gold so that it may conceal a locket for the wearer's most cherished miniature. This is $60.

Speaking of bags, there is a corner where only bags are made, bags to match any costume. There is a round flat one that is particularly beautiful. Rows of Still another has beaded embroidery worked into the silk of its background. Each of these is made in colors to suit the most fastidious, and is priced $20.

THE COLLAR THAT MAKES THE COWN

Some one has suggested that it is the collar that makes the gown, and so there comes a designing person to prove it. She makes only collars (oh, guimpes and She makes only collars (oh, guimpes and chemisettes, too,) but her hobby is just collars. One very simple set of collar and cuffs in white Georgette crêpe with a folded white net edge is $3, and a charming double cape collar of white batiste made over pink and buttonholed about the edges with white linen thread is $2.50. She will with equal interest spectro. She will, with equal interest, create a collar to suit a gown, or a collar to inspire the creation of a gown.

Then who should appear in this mêlée Then who should appear in this mêlée of special hand workers but a small band of Italian lace makers? They will take into their keeping, and it is tender, heirlooms of lace, and with almost invisible threads they will restore it to an unbelievable freshness. Rare embroideries, hand-made nets, and even cross-stitch samplers are mended by them, and before they attempt any given piece of work they will estimate the cost. A refugee from France does remarkably heautiful hand-embroidery on linen, and

There is a spot where one may have linen single-hemstitched by hand for 30 cents a yard, or double-hemstitched at 50 cents a yard. Smocking in various styles and quantities is also handled here. Three-inch wide smocking on the shoulders and cuffs of a smock costs $4. Another small shop embroiders initials on table linen most carefully; the

The story goes that just at present dyes are hard to obtain, but there is one dye merchant long established who is doing excellent work with the materials at hand. Stockings and shoes, laces and nets, chiffons and silks, are dyed to match the tone of this or to harmonize with the color scheme of that. When the moment comes that there is a crying need for a finishing touch of color on an otherwise perfect frock—what then? Well then there is a shop where a corsage bouquet of silk or velves, where a corsage bouquet of silk or velvets, of silver or gold blossoms will be made, for $5. CANTHROX SHAMPOO

This daintily perfumed scalp stimulating hair cleanser has been the favorite for years because, unlike soap or other inferior preparations, it is made for hair washing only and in addition to its cleaning properties is known to have a beneficial effect upon both hair and scalp.

One reason for its years of popularity is that it is so easy to use. You simply apply the creamy lather and it dissolves every particle of dandruff, dirt and excess oil so they disappear entirely when the hair is riused, after which it dries very quickly and so fluffly it has the appearance of being much heavier than it is.

15 Exhilarating Shampoos for 50c at Your Druggist's

This is about three cents a shampoo. No good hair wash can be made for less. If troubled with dandruff you will notice the first shampoo removes most of it and after each succeeding shampoo you find the flakes smaller and fewer until they disappear.

lamp-shades made to order at from 25 to 50 cents. The manufacturer of wire things in any locality will usually make such frames to order. It is important, however, to give explicit important, however, to give expirite a measurements, particularly in regard to the ring by which the shade sets on the burner or collar of the lamp. The collar upon which this ring rests is usually detachable, and it is best to give it to the wire worker as a guide. A well-proportioned shade of generous size measures forty-nine inches around the top and sixty inches around the bottom, and has sides ten inches high.

WORK FOR DEFT FINGERS

When the wire frame is completed and examined to assure its being well balanced and of the right size, the first step is to cover it neatly by carefully wrapping each wire with tan silk seam binding. This wire with tan sik seam binding. Inside shinding usually costs 15 cents by the piece, and two pieces should be sufficient for a shade of the proportions described. The lining is then put on. It is best to attach the lining first to the bottom hoop the sufficient of the state of the state of the state of the sufficient with the sufficient product of the sufficient product attach the lining first to the bottom hoop on which it may be stretched perfectly plain or gathered slightly, as preferred. The top, being of smaller circumference, will necessarily have to be either gathered or laid in small plaits. All gathers or plaits should be carefully adjusted and pinned in place before the silk is sewed to the frame. The outer cover is applied in pinned in place before the sik is sewed to the frame. The outer cover is applied in the same manner, and the fringe or trim-ming may be either glued or sewed on. For the shade described, three quarters of a yard of the wide taffeta mentioned will make the covering and leave a small piece of material that might be used to advantage for two candle-shades for the same room where the lamp-shade is used.

In the same illustration with this shade, at the top of page 58, is sketched another lamp-shade, which is of unique propor-tions and most suitable for small slender tions and most suitable for small slender lamps or tall candlestick lights. The frame for this shade requires extra hoops half-way between the top and bottom hoop, to support the middle one of the three taffeta flounces. Any plain colored taffeta may be used for these flounces, each of which is corded on its lower edge. A few tiny flowers supporting tasseled streamers add to the whole a note of no small importance.

HANGING THE HANGINGS

Few accessories of decoration offer wider field for clever brains and nimble fingers than the hangings. There is such endless variety of comparatively inex-pensive materials from which original hangings may be made, that the prevalence of the usual chintz is not easy to explain. Suspiciously like the henrietta cloth which made gowns for the last gencloth which made gowns for the last gen-eration is: this 'generation's casement cloth. All wool and a yard-and-fourteen-inches wide, this cloth comes in plain colors and in different qualities which vary in price from 95 cents to $2.50 a yard. It is the perfect fabric for over-draperies in the room that requires neither figured material nor brocades and velvets; it needs no lining, and the finished curtain hangs in long soft folds.

Another dress material of former days converted to modern house decoration brilliantine, about $1.50 a yard. The light colors are semi-transparent, and when lined with colored silk they are unusually effective against the light of the window. This and casement cloth and, in fact, almost all the plain materials, whether cotton, wool, silk, or velvet, are enjoying great popularity, though a well-chosen chintz, if used in moderation, is by no means to be despised.

In unpretentious country houses, the most inexpensive cotton fabrics are used most effectively for curtains. There are some very attractive sun-fast materials which come either plain or figured and may be had in a very good quality at $1.25 a yard. In a room with colorful figured paper, unbleached cotton and even cheese-cloth make satisfactory curtains. Both of these materials are the first part between the control of the con tains. Both of these materials may be dyed, if preferred, and they take color beautifully. To relieve the plainness, borders, bindings, or hems of another fabric may be used. Gingham, chambray, and chintz are all good materials to use and chintz are all good materials to use as set-on borders; cotton, woolen, or silk binding tape also makes an effective edge for plain curtains. Colored fringe, too, lends its aid to solve the problem of decorating and adding color to such draperies. There are many standard varieties of narrow silk and cotton fringe with which every one is more or less familiar, and there are some reproductions, mostly of this year's vintage, of the old woolen and chenille fringes and trimmings. In price, these fringes range upward from 38 cents a yard.

REINSTATING THE DECORATIVE CORNICE

Another revival that does not con amiss for modern window decoration is the cornice, which has been omitted of recent years to a great extent, especially in smaller houses and apartments. It now reappears, not in gold and elaborate scrolls as of yore, but plain and severe in outline, built of thin boards, and decorated to suit the coloring of the curtains that hape from it extra contract the contract of the coloring of the curtains. rated to suit the coloring of the currant that hang from it or the room that harbors it. The cornice sketched with the curtains at the bottom of page 58 is built of thin flat boards with a half-inch rounding molding at the bottom and an inchand-a-half molding at the top. It is a ing molding at the bottom and an anal-a-half molding at the top. It is a thing which any carpenter could build and that any resourceful person could decorate to suit its surroundings. The one illustrated is painted a cream color, and the panels at either side are dull blue, outlined with a black stripe which, in its turn, is outlined with narrow gold stripes. When and Where The Permanent Hair Wave

Was First Introduced in America

SOMETIMES that which is popularly supposed to be new is not new at all. It was very nearly nine years ago that the Permanent Hair Wave was introduced to the society women of America at PIERRE'S establishment. The process employed at Pierre's has been improved every year until to-day it requires but half the time formerly necessary and has been brought very nearly to perfection.

There is no twisting, pulling or kinking of the hair; in fact the waving is so gentle that one could sleep during the operation. The PIERRE process of waving is particularly healthful to the scalp; after being waved, the hair stands up from the roots, permitting air to circulate about the scalp and insuring proper ventilation of the hair, making it light, soft and fluffy.

night, soft and numy.

If you would like to have your hair permanently waved, but have heretofore been timid about having it done, consult PIERRE. Pierre's unquestioned integrity, proved during his many years of service to the women of America is assurance that you can rely upon his advice.

Pierre's Success in America has made him pre-eminent in the three branches of his profession:

TRANSFORMATIONS
PERMANENT HAIR WAVING

NATURAL HAIR COLORING

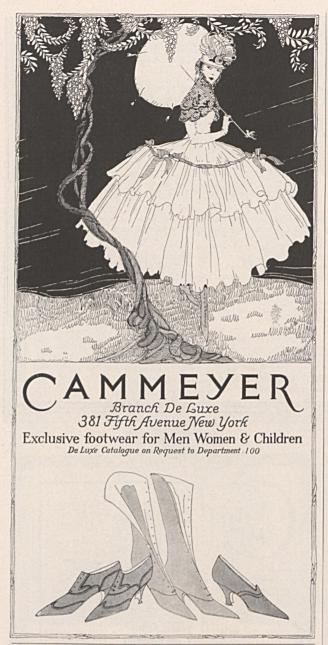

He has demonstrated in his work that his aim is always to give the BEST, to achieve the most ARTISTIC and LASTING results. As a result his establishment on East Fortysixth Street, New York, is becoming known as the one place where the woman of discrimination is always certain of obtaining satisfaction. It is patronized by a large and exclusive clientele.

If this seemed too plain, a panel could be outlined on the fabric with cord or with silk binding tape.

In the same room with these curtains are the electric wall fixtures pictured at are the electric wall fixtures pictured at the right of page 58, which are interesting not only for their design and color, but also because they are made of a composi-tion material, which is much less expen-sive than metal or carved wood. The flower cluster, which is in bas-relief and lies flat against the wall, is painted in colors to harmonize with the room, and the light hides behind a cream colored shield on which a dainty silhouette design in black is used. If the exact thing one wants can not be found ready-made, it can always be made to order somewhere. The little shop where these fixtures originated is most clever at carrying out ideas, and as to period things, be they English, French, Italian, or Chinese, correct designs are available in the public libraries, and many plates may be found evines working plans. plates may be found giving working plans and exact dimensions. The graceful well-proportioned urns found in colonial decoration make very handsome lamps. Many of them may simply be turned out Many of them may simply be turned out of wood, while others require some additional hand-carving, which, of course, makes them more expensive. They may be finished to look like mahogany, or painted to suit the room in whatever color may be desired. The colonial urn lamp at the upper left on page 58 is fluted

There is probably nothing that gives a room exactly the air of distinction which is imparted by paneled walls. Oak or walnut paneling is prohibitively costly to a person of moderate means, but there are other ways of obtaining the effect of panels. One of the best ways is to have the walls entirely freed of paper, the plaster put into perfect condition, and well-proportioned panels laid out on the well-proportioned panels laid out on the walls with moldings. Great care should be taken to insure the correct proportion in this paneling and to keep the proportion true to the type and period of paneling which one wishes to reproduce. French, English, and Italian paneling differ widely as to their proportions. The relation of the panels to the wall space must also be carefully studied, if one wishes a truly distinctive room.

If the walls are in bad condition or apt

If the walls are in bad condition or apt to settle and crack, it is wise to have them to settle and crack, it is wise to have them covered with a burlap or linen wall covering before the panels are placed. This is more costly, but the result will be more satisfactory. When the molding has been put in place, the walls and woodwork should be painted one color. One shade is preferable for the entire room, though, if one prefers, the inside of the panel may be a slightly darker shade, as this adds an effect of depth.

For the support there are many kinds of

For the summer there are many kinds of linen and cotton wash materials, of which slip covers may be made for the furniture and pillows, converting the house into an enclosed porch at very little expense. It is well, by the way, to go still further in preparing the house for the summer and preparing the house for the summer and take down practically all hangings and put away all unnecessary bric-à-brac. By making the whole house as bare and light in color as possible, such a complete contrast may be accomplished as really to give one a winter home and summer home, all in one house. Slip covers are rather troublesome things to make, especially if the furniture is of a shape that cially if the furniture is of a shape that requires special fitting, but they are their own reward to the woman who spends the entire year in one place, for it is she who must depend the most upon the details of house decoration to make the house at-tractive and to avoid monotony.

A somewhat similar plant stand is shown at the left of the fireplace which is one of the admirable features of this same sun-room and is illustrated at the left on page 57, in the middle. Antique wrought iron forms the general decorative motif in this room; the firefender is an excellent example of the skill of the sixteenth-century iron worker, and an Italian wrought iron arch serves as a trellis for ivy and also as a frame for a Florentine adonna of glazed terra cotta in rich old colorings.

The dignity which may be given to even a small piazza is illustrated in the photograph at the lower right on page 57. AS TO INVITATIONS

Mrs. W. M. G.-Will you kindly state the correct form for an invitation to a wedding reception? Shall I send invitations or announcements to out-oftown friends whom I do not expect will be able to attend?

Ans.—The following is the correct form for the invitation to a wedding reception:

Mr. and Mrs. George Warren request the pleasure of your company at the wedding reception of their daughter Virginia Marie and Mr. Lawrence Perry McDonald on Thursday, the twenty-fifth of March at half after twelve o'clock at Twenty-five Grand Avenue Newport, Rhode Island

An invitation is always more complimentary than an announcement, even though it is out of the question for the guests to accept it.

AS TO THE WEDDING ITSELF

Miss F. S.—My sister, who is a widow of thirty-five, is to be married from her own, not her parents' home, but both parents live in the same town. In view of these conditions, will you answer the following questions?

How and by whom should the engagement be announced? Should the wedment be announced? Should the wedding take place in a church with a reception following; or is it better form to have a home wedding? Should the wedding be necessarily small, and should it be in the afternoon or evening? Should the bride have any attendants? Should parties of any sort with the exception of dinners be given for the bride before the wedding? Ans—The usual way to anounce as Ans.—The usual way to announce an engagement is for the bride or her mother to write notes to their friends. An en-The place where the ceremony is to be performed is a matter of choice. It is equally correct to have a church or a home wedding, followed in either case by a reception. At present afternoon weddings are the more fashionable; and in the case of your sister it would be equally case of your sister it would be equally good form to have either a large or a small wedding. It is not usual for the bride who is a widow to have attendants,—that is, bridesmaids; she may, however, have a maid or matron of honor.

however, have a maid or matron of honor-It is difficult to dictate to friends what kind of parties they should give in honor of oneself. In fact, all sorts of functions may be arranged. As to functions given by the bride or her family, a dinner to bring the two families together, or a tea at which the groom may be introduced to the bride's friends, would be quite appropriate, but not a necessity.

THE IMPORTANT MATTER OF DRESS

Mrs. D. R. W .- I would like to know MRS. D. R. W.—I would like to know whether or not it is good form to wear a wedding gown and veil at a day wedding at home. Also, what is the correct dress for men on such occasions?

dress for men on such occasions?

Ans.—It is perfectly correct to wear a wedding gown and veil at a day wedding at home. The correct dress for all men to wear at a day wedding is as follows:

a black cutaway coat with waistcoat to match, dark gray trousers, a dark tie, black shoes (preferably patent leather), black socks, a top hat, and gray gloves. The frock coat is rarely seen now, except

The frock coat is rarely seen now, except in the case of an older man who prefers that style, in which case, it is quite permissible for him to wear it.

Mrss P. H.—Will you kindly answer the following questions? What is the proper way for women to dress for an afternoon wedding reception to be held at an exclusive club? Should hats be worn to the reception and if so, should worn to the reception, and if so, should they be removed during the reception?

they be removed during the reception? Is it customary, when presented, to shake hands with both the bridal couple and the bride's parents?

Ans.—Conservative smart women in New York usually wear a handsome street costume at an afternoon wedding; in fact, it is only very rarely that one sees light gowns worn by any except the members of the wedding party. At one of the most conservative weddings recently, nearly all the women were in tailored costumes. Hats should be worn at the reception and not removed; it is at the reception and not removed; it is not smart to be seen without a hat until after six o'clock. It is usual to shake hands with the bridal pair and also with the prants, as the occasion warrants an added warmth is the occasion warrants an added warmth is the occasion.

the parents, as the occasion warrants an added warmth in the greeting.

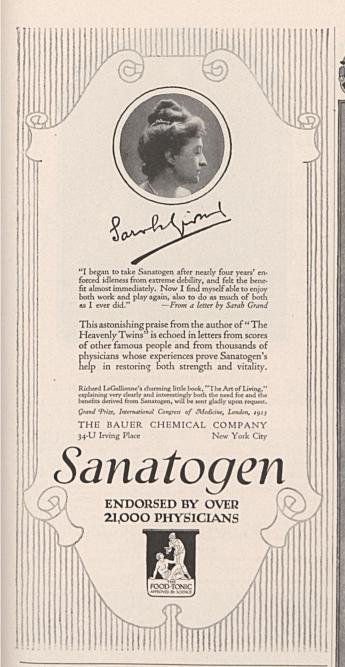

Mrs. C. H. D.—Will you kindly suggest a costume for a six-year-old boy who is to be a page at a wedding?

Ans.—It is usual to dress the page at a wedding in either white broadclot of satin. The Oliver Twist costume with lace collar and cuffs is picturesque. A dark velvet coat and very short knickers, a white satin shirt, white silk stockings and buckled shoes, would be equally appropriate. The idea is to make the child look as much like a little page as appropriate. The idea is to make the child look as much like a little page as possible.

THE MAID OF HONOR

Miss H. W.—What are the duties of the maid of honor? If she is engaged should her fiance take her in to supper or should the best man?

Ans.—The duties of the maid of honor are to precede the bride as she enters, hold her bouquet, help arrange her veil, and even her train when she turns around; in fact, to help her in every way. The maid of honor also usually stands near the bride while she is receiving. It is not absolutely necessary for the maid of honor to go to supper with the best man, although it would be a pretty compliment to him and very considerate of the fiancé to waive his right of taking her in to supper. MUSIC NOTES

GETZ'S "Taming of the Shrew," the last première of the season
at the Metropolitan Opera House, was given on Wednesday evening, March 15, and whether or not it was produced with the intention of participating in the Shakespearean celebration, its production was certainly timely. A few performances of the opera were given in this country about thirty vears ago, at the time when the opera were given in this country about thirty years ago, at the time when the American Opera Company essayed to produce every score in English; but that ill-fated company soon disbanded, and no attempt has been made to revive the opera until now. The leading parts were taken by Mme. Ober, as "Katharine," Clarence Whitehill, as "Petruchio," and Mme. Rappold, as "Bianca," while Johannes Sembach, Otto Goritz, Basil Ruysdael, Mme. Mattfeld, and Albert Reiss interpreted the other characters.

AT THE METROPOLITAN

"Sonnambula," with Barrientos in a rôle which was a favorite with both Sembrich and Tetrazzini, had its revival on March 3, after a six years' absence from America. While its return was by no means sensational, still there are many musical conservatives who regard it as very beautiful music, neither too rigidly German por yet too tragically Italian, German nor yet too tragically Italian, and it will undoubtedly remain to add variety to the coloratura repertory. The "Pearl Fishers," an opera which had been specially prepared for the phenomenally flexible voice of Barrientos, was taken off and canceled for the season, though many rehearsals had brought it to a state of perfection; and Geraldine Farrar, after a week or two of appearances to huge houses, suddenly joined the ranks of the "indisposed" and completely distorted the operatic schedule by postponements of "Carmen" and "Madame Sans Gêne." Were it not for the military precision with which the musical machinery of the Metropolitan is engineered, the results might have been most disastrous, yet neither the subscribers nor the general public had cause to voice any disastisticant. public had cause to voice any dissatis-faction with the offerings substituted. Mme. Homer's reappearance this season in "Samson and Delilah" and "Aida" has been one of the most beautiful impressions at the opera. Her success is in "Samson and Delilah" and "Arda has been one of the most beautiful impressions at the opera. Her success is not entirely due to the richness and color of her rare contralto, but is accentuated by a stage presence replete with dignity, grace, and magnetism. Maude Fay, dramatic soprano from the Royal Opera in Munich, made her début in February as "Sieglinda" in "Die Walküre." Her voice, while not of great volume, is of much beauty, as her recital in March further proved.

The Metropolitan Company will finish the month of April in Boston, and many of the principals will appear later in Havana for a short operatic season. The Russian Ballet, having succeeded the opera at the Metropolitan Opera House, will add to its repertory of productions six works not seen at the recent Century Theatre performances.

WHERE only the practical is attempted, disappointments are few. why Mrs. Adair has been so continuously and notably successful during her many years of practical work in restoring youthful attributes to face and form. This is why the conservative, difficult-to-please woman in all countries seeks her administrations in preference to all others. It is the element of actual results that distinguishes her work.

A soft mesh appliance which can be worn at night with comfort. Its use will gradually eliminate the double chin and all vestige of looseness or flabbiness of the skin about the chin and neck. $6.50, $5.

Ganesh Chin Strap

The woman of forty-five, who has never given her complexion or contour a thought, cannot be transformed in a day into a youthful beauty. Mrs. Adair neither promises nor attempts such feats. She is too busy helping her clients to overcome the immediate and actual blemish, the crowsfeet, the double chin. As a result of Mrs. Adair's PRACTICAL work, younger, fresher, prettier faces are replacing older, lined, dried up, colorless faces.

PRACTICAL in the last degree is the Ganesh (original) Strapping Muscle Treatment. This is no painting and powdering process. It is a scientific, systematic, gentle tapping and strapping of the facial muscles. Its result is the immediate stimulation and self-renewing of the tired, worn tissues so that new life and healthy color is given the face. The sagging skin is made firm. Blemshes are discouraged. Wrinkles are flattened. A new, youthful complexion is built on a foundation which insures its permanency. This is practical, sensible, beautifying. You can learn its worth in a trial treatment, at $2.50. Expert English attendants.

Is unsequalled for the quick and complete removal of frown lines and furrows, $4.55.

USED in the above treatment, and contributing to a great extent to its unusual efficacy, is the Ganesh Eastern Muscle Oil. So perfected that it is akin to the under tissues where it nourishes and lubricates the muscles, strengthening and rounding out the contour. The Ganesh Eastern Muscle Oil is unlike any other preparation in existence and is one of Mrs. Adair's most notable successes. Bottles for home use may be had at $5, $2.50 and $1.

There are fifty other Ganesh Preparations to correct blemishes and imperve the skin generally. Mrs. Adair's Price List Booklet will describe them all to you and her Lecture Book (free) will tell much of her methods and thoroughness. You are invited to write for both of them.

The recital was largely in German, in which the singer German, in which the singer is faultless, and though it lacked a bit in variety, Mr. Hinshaw's artistry and the dramatic breadth of his interpretations made it one of the work enjoyable of interpretations made it one of the most enjoyable of the season. At Aeolian Hall in March, another highly successful recital was that of George Hamlin, the distinguished tenor. Mr. Hamlin, on this occasion, accomplished the difficult feat of "singing over" a cold, that Waterloo of so many a singer; his splendid vocalism and complete command of the respiratory command of the respiratory organs obliterated any deorgans obliterated any de-fect, and the entire program was beautifully rendered. Aside from his notable dic-tion in both English and German, Mr. Hamlin ex-hibited in Leoncavallo's "Romanza" a fluent velvety bel canto which would excite the admiration of a native Italian. This

The fourth violin recital of Eddy Brown, held at Aeolian Hall, in March, was sufficient proof of the fact that his high rank in the violin world is established on a foundation of solid musicianship and deep musical feling. ON HER DRESSING-TABLE

HETHER it is due to the patience and bravery of some indomitable importer or whether it is that we are selves, it is difficult to tell; but many new and alluring fittings for the dressing-table have appeared recently in the shops. Some of these fittings are so definitely suggestive of old world workmanship that one is led to believe them imported in spite of the war. Others, however, foster the belief that the American manufacturer is taking advantage of the situation to expend more time and thought upon these luxuries, the supplying of which he previously left to the old world. Among them is the toilet-set below, of lacquered brass with a design finely carved on each piece. The lines of the larger pieces such as the mirror, the brushes, and the powder-boxes are of the graceful slender styles of the period of the Louis of France. The set is finished with a fine lacquer, which prevents the brass from tarnishing, and gives a rich gold appearance to the set. This set on an old mahogany dressing-table would be very handsome. The mirror is $8.25; hair brush, $6.50; tray, $4.95; hat-brush, $4.35; clothes-brush, $6; buffer, $4.50; comb, $2.95; cuticle knife, $2.25; scissors, $3; file, $2.25; powder-box, $5.25; hair receiver, $5.25; hook, $2.25; cream jars $1.75 each.

FROM JAPAN, THE INCENSE-BURNER

Of a finish to correspond excellently with this lacquered brass toilet-set on the dressing-table is the Japanese brass koro or incense-burner above. It has a heavy bamboo leaf and trunk design and open-work top. It comes also in an antique bronze finish; the size is 5½ by 4½ inches; the price is $2.25. Another incense-burner is designed to represent a chrysanthemum bud. It comes also in brass or in the antique bronze finish for $1. A famous temple incense which has the advantage of being also a deodorizer is to be used in such burners as these. The incense comes in an oriental box weighing four ounces, and is priced 50 cents a box.

A gold cigarette case with a satin and figured stripe and black enamel initials would fittingly accompany these articles on the dressing-table. It is priced at $25. The initials may be done in blue or black enamel or in brilliants at prices varying according to the style of initial selected.

A SACHET EQUIPMENT

The accessories of the dressing-table are unusually dainty this season. For the bottom of the dressing-table drawer is a pad of quilted silk in pale blue or shell pink. With this pad comes a large bow of eight loops, two of which contain rare rose sachets. These sets are made in any color at the price of $7$ for the set.

$7 for the set.

A veil roll is made of silk to match the pad. This roll will hold twelve veils, and keep them fresh and in good order. The keep them fresh and in good order. The price is $4.75.

A novel pincushion for the shelf of the hat cupboard is made six inches square in silk of the various shades of blue, pink, and lavender. A smart bow of silk ribbon ties a bisque figure of a creeping baby or a Dresden shepherdess to the top of the cushion, which has pins of all varieties, and costs $4.

A box done in blue or in old rose damask, with a quaint medallion set in the top, has neat little compartments for hairpins of assorted sizes. The price of the little boxes with pins is $2.50.

Note.—Those inquiring for names of shops where dressing-table articles may be purchased should enclose a stamped and addressed envelope for reply, and state page and date.

BEAUTY and the ACTRESS

T would be like stepping into an all star performance if all those celebrated stage favorites, patrons of mine, should meet at one time.

"I have always felt that if I could make a success in the care of the actress's complexion that I would never have any trouble with other women. There are none quicker to realize than stage folk that while talent is a wonderful thing, mental equipment and true artistic temperament the rarest of possessions, yet physical beauty frequently finds them wanting when weighed against them in the balance.

"These celebrated women have discovered the truism that although it is a good policy to be as beautiful as you can, it is the better policy to be more beautiful than you are. And then they have learned another truth: They realize that it is impossible to buy beauty across the counter. They take their beauty troubles to the woman who knows, and they have come to me."

ART NOTES

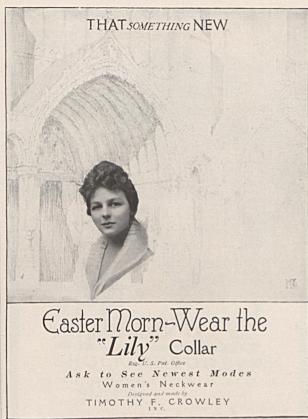

MARCH continued the general trend of this ver-

M ARCH continued the general trend of this year's art season in a multiplicity of small exhibitions, all containing works of more than usual merit.

On view at the Scott and Fowles Galleries were a hundred and twenty works of the inexhaustible Bakst. This collection ran the gamut of Bakst's varied genius from the exotic and glowing stage-settings and costumes, on which rests his greatest fame, through the less familiar range of portraiture and drawings in black and white, and even included the immense painting in oil, "Terror Antiquus," which has sometimes been called Bakst's masterpiece in oil. This painting was exhibited at the International Exposition at Brussels in 1910 and tional Exposition at Brussels in 1910 and there won the honor of a gold medal.

To the Keppel Galleries,

To the Keppel Galleries, print lovers were indebted in March for an exhibition of nearly a hundred etchings and lithographs by Whistler.

Notable among the etchings shown at the Keppel Galleries were a number of etchings of the Venice set, including the "Nocturne," "The Palaces" and "The Traghetto." There was also an exceptionally fine print of that wonder of light and soft shadow, "The Kitchen," and there were two portraits of the children of Seymour Haden, which two portraits of the children of Seymour Haden, which were of interest not only as prints, but also from the personal side, as these children were the niece and nephew of Whistler.

The exhibition of the work of Gari Melchers, which filled the Montross Gallery during the last weeks of March, added but little of new lustre to that artist's reputation, for the artist's reputation, for the best of the work shown there was not of the most work shown there was not of the most recent date.

No exhibition which contained the "Easter Sunday" could be called dull, however, for it is one of the finest of the many excellent works of Gari Melchers, and an opportunity to see it again is always welcome. Melchers

Gari Melchers, like many American painters in recent years, finds a new and engaging theme in the boudoir loves the sunshine as Frieseke loves it, and he here pictures it filtering through the still air of the church, touching the stained glass window to brilliancy and patterning the wall with flecks of gold. The composition emphasizes this interest in light, for it restricts the human element in the painting to a bare third of the canvas. Within that limited space, however, is such clever grouping, such keen and sympathetic study of expressions and types, such an atmosphere of solemn festival, that one returns again and one returns again and again, with increasing pleasure, to study it.

One of the notable tendencies in American tendencies in American painting in recent years is an increasing interest in the portrayal of boudoir scenes. Nearly all our figure painters now try their hands at this type of genre painting, and Melchers attained a marked success in the version which he contributed to this exhibition.

To the other canvases less commendation is due. Too much of the still life seemed "painty" and perfunctory, lacking in definite incentive or perception of beauty.

"THE HEART OF WETONA"

"THE HEART OF WETONA," by George Scarborough, is an interesting melodrama; or else it is made to seem so by the admirable acting of a company selected and rehearsed by David Belasco.

Wetona is an Indian princess who has loved not wisely but too well. She has allowed herself to be seduced by a white man, who has promised to marry her at some time indefinitely dated in the future. When this fact becomes known to her father, she refuses to divulge the name of father, she refuses to divulge the name of her lover; and, in consequence, she is ostracized by her own people and drummed out of the tribe.

She flees at once to the house of a friendly Indian agent named John Hardin, in order to ask for his advice. Her father follows her, and suspects that Hardin is the guilty man. Hardin, in reality, is innocent; but he loves Wetona, and, in order to shield her from the anger of her father, he agrees to marry her immediately. To Wetona he explains that their union shall be merely a marriage in name, and that, whenever her riage in name, and that, whenever her lover shall be ready to marry her, Hardin will set her free with a divorce.

The Indian agent soon discovers that the man who had seduced Wetona is Tony Wells. He knows that Tony is a cad and that he has never had the slightcad and that he has hever had the significant est intention of marrying Wetona. Hardin now throws the two frequently together and leaves them often alone in each other's company, in order that Wetona may discover for herself that her wetona may discover for nersell that nel love has been bestowed upon a worthless man. The most interesting feature of the play is the well-reasoned psychologic process by which Hardin ultimately cures Wetona of her love for Tony. Tony at last is killed by the Indians, who, having leasened the total heaves as repossible that the process of the proces learned the truth, have surrounded the house to cut off his escape. Wetona, by this time, has learned to appreciate the love of Hardin, and settles down with him to live a happy married life.

"PAY-DAY"

"PAY-DAY," by Oliver D. Bailey and Lottie Meaney, was announced upon the program as "a talking motion picture play," or "a dramatization of a moving picture scenario." It began with a pro-logue, in which an actor and an actress sat down to read a scenario which had been offered to them as an inducement to enter the motion picture field. Then the scenario itself was acted out, in accord-ance with the conventions of the moving picture drama. Each scene was preceded by an explanatory caption thrown upon a screen. Then the action began with mov-ing pictures which showed the actors in a ing pictures within showed the actors in a certain situation; and, after a few moments, the pictures faded away, and the actors continued the scene in person on the stage. Last of all, there came an epilogue, in which the actor and the actress who had been supposed to be reading the scenario decided that it was a very bad play but that there might be money in it.

The scenario itself was very bad indeed; for it told a wild and whirling story that was utterly incredible. On the occasion of the first night, the audience was bored of the first high, the adulence was bored for half the evening, and then began to laugh, more or less uproariously, at the preposterous incidents which led up to the climax. The next morning, the managers announced that the whole thing had been intended as a burlesque, and that the public had been invited to laugh.

There were rumors up and down Broadway, however, that the managers had expected the play to be accepted seriously as a melodrama until the laughter of the first-night audience warned them sud-denly that they had better advertise the piece as a satire. At any rate, it is as a burlesque that "Pay-Day" continues to be played. Undeniably, it is extremely funny; but, after all, it is not so funny as "Margaret Schiller," which is still adver-tised as a play that is intended to be taken seriously.

taken seriously.

Considered as a satire, "Pay-Day" could be made more whole-heartedly enjoyable by the simple expedient of telling the audience clearly, at a point very early in the action, that the play is really meant to be as bad as it actually is.

"THE GREATEST NATION"

T is not at all necessary to argue against It is not at all necessary to argue against pacifism; for, to be convinced against it, it is sufficient merely to listen to the pacifists themselves. It seems rather a pity that they should talk such twaddle; for, after all, they must have a better for, after all, they must have a better case than they succeed in making out. "The Greatest Nation," by Marion Crighton and William Elliott, was a pacifist play; and it lasted for a single week. Radow, King of Adlon, has quite openly conspired to have his neighbor, the King of Thor, assassinated; and when Alan, the Crown Prince of Thor, is elevated to the throne, his people clamor for a war of retribution. But Alan is a pacifist; and he handles the situation in a rather novel way. First of all, he orders his own soldiers to go on a strike, and advises the soldiers of on the sends a million roses to the Princess Royal of Adlon; for Alan is very fond of flowers, and for years has spent the public funds to make his special principality one vast rose garden. Lastly, the public tunds to make his special principality one vast rose garden. Lastly, he pays a personal visit to the man who has murdered his father and suggests that the best way to settle the little matter is by a marriage between himself and the Princess Royal of Adlon.

This piece was set before an audience which had read something about Relegium

This piece was set before an audience which had read something about Belgium and something about Switzerland; and, somehow, it did not seem to tally with the things that are. That is why it failed. The one thing notable about the production was the scenery of Josef Urban, which was very sumptuous and very beautiful.

THE INIMITABLE TALENT

RIGINALITY is not original, with no other originality like it; indeed, it falls into two well-defined classes, unconscious and conscious. The first brings its owner not so much gain as notoriety, for the unconsciously original man is usually someconsciously original man is usually somewhat insane. He wears fourteen pairs of galoshes at one time, and then walks backwards. He assumes the heavy responsibilities of God or the ermined royalty of Queen Victoria. He does startling, unheard-of things with an appalling simplicity. He tells the truth under all circumstances. He tells his friends the facts about themselves. He is original; he is too original. Society can not support his presence and so it can not support his presence and so it segregates him with his ilk, that he may pursue his delusions apart from a world that must wear one galosh at a time and temper truth with discretion.

AN ART. A BUSINESS, OR A PLAGUE

The second sort of this vice or virtue is a marketable product, for conscious originality becomes an art, a business, or originality becomes an art, a business, or a successful advertisement. There is no-thing more charming than a well-planned, consistent originality; there is rothing more profitable. But very often his originality is a base imitation, a stale counterfeit of the real, the inimitable talent, for among a is a base imitation, a state counterted of the real, the inimitable talent, for among a million men there is only one who is consciously and successfully original. The remaining unfortunates draw their fads, their poses, their manner of doing, their way of thinking from him. If by any chance he is able to copyright his originality, he becomes rich.

Were originality a more common gift, then it would be necessary for novelists, artists, playwrights, actors, editors, and designers to give up their professions. If every one were original, there would be no fads or fashions, for there would be none to follow them. Each in his isolated orbit would be cutting his hair after his own idea of landscape gardening; but as it is to-day a Mrs. Vernon Castle follows a courageous inspiration and society. it is to-day a Mrs. Verinon Castle objects at large bobs its hair. A Gabriele D'Annunzio induces thousands of nice youngmen to believe in the entire awfulness of everything. There are too many Englishment objects of the control of everything. There are too many Englishmen who refuse to starch their shirts because Shaw does n't; and there are no end of people who chew every morsel of food thirty-two chews, under the hypnotic influence of Fletcher. How many men wore orchids because Chamberlain did? Was it Madame Poiret or Bakst who blazed the way for the wrinkled and alluring Russian boot?

IS THERE UNQUESTIONED ORIGINALITY?

As every year adds another to the millions of years the world has lasted, it is evident that with every year it becomes more difficult to be original. Euripides did not find it as hard to invent a new dramatic situation as Edward Knoblauch does; Shakespeare used all the plots discarded by the Greeks; Gouver-neur Morris writes only variations on old familiar themes. Nero did all that old familiar themes. Nero did all that could be done in the way of dinners. Septimus Severus had steam heat in his palace on the Palatine. Leonardo da Vinci thought of aeroplanes five hundred years before Wright was born. The most luxury-loving woman of to-day could not surpass the glittering magnificence of Cleopatra or the astounding originalities of Elizabeth of England. Brangwyn's somber etchings suggest Rembrandt; Beardsley is Brunelleschi anglicized; Borglum smacks of Michelangelo. There are crumbling frescoes in Etruscan tombs that Matisse might have painted. Puvis are crumbling frescoes in Etruscan tombs that Matisse might have painted. Puvis de Chevannes must have looked long at Giotto's saints and Fra Angelico's angels. Granville Barker's gilt fairies were an old story to Lorenzo of Florence and the Sforzas. Debussy's tone scale was doubtless a part of Pan's repertoire, and according to eve witnesses the whimand according to eye witnesses the whim-sical god piped it to charming nymphs who danced in Isadora Duncan's manner. Even war is as old as the world. Even history (it has often been said) repeats itself.

We live in a sophisticate the said of th

history (ithasoften been said) repeatsitself.

We live in a sophisticated age. We wait, languid and cynical, for a new form of excitement. Nothing but a miracle stirs us. A woman wrapped in cloth of gold, her feet strapped to clanking brass sandals, a pet dinosaur following her on a silver chain, could take a daily stroll on Fifth Avenue without delaying traffic more than a moment on the first day she appeared. She would soon become as much a matter of course as the diminutive semaphore, and just as unheeded.

WOULD THIS BE GENIUS?

Never have there been so many original people as there are to-day. All over the world men and women are racking their brains for some new way to create excitement to distribute the distribute to distribute the same and the same are to distribute to distribute the same are the s world men and women are racking these brains for some new way to create excitement, to disturb the general lethargy, and to tickle sluggish curosity and interferst. We have them to thank for the talking machine, the cinematograph, the submarine, the aeroplane, the fox trot, and the wireless telephone. What could there be that has not already been? Has originality reached the end of its tether? No. There is still to arise the man who shall give us our first introduction to the plain, simple, and unsensational pleasures and pursuits that have always surrounded us and to which we have been indifferent; the man who shall make the unobvious obvious. He will show us the significance of being what the majority of us are, simple, delightful, and mediocre. Would this man be called the genius of his time?

ANSWERING ONE WAR PROBLEM

HE war has brought about a condition to which, though all of us know it must exist, few of us have given thought. Workers, both men and women, by the tens of thousands have answered the sudden, imperative, and continuous demand for war materials, and the problem of housing and caring for them has been a great Small towns and cities where munition factories are located have had their populations increased by huge numbers over-night, and they have had no means over-night, and they have had no means to cope with such sudden growth. It is the employer who, besides having to adapt his plant to the orders that rush in, has had to take in hand the accommodation of this horde of new employees.

It is fortunate that in this crisis there is a well-equipped agency to which the factory owners may turn for help. The factory owners may turn for help. The National Civic Federation has been established for thirteen years, and its welfare department is prepared to offer immediate aid to solving urgent problems. The need of improving conditions for the men and women workers in munition factories was early realized by the federations and Mr. Palph M. Fesley chairs. eration, and Mr. Ralph M. Easley, chairman of the executive council, sent a letter to the munition factories in this country, some time ago, in which he directed attention to the comprehensive system of help that the welfare department was fully prepared to give.

THE WORK OF THE WELFARE DEPARTMENT

Mr. Easley stated in this letter: "The welfare department of our organization can immediately provide experts to make plant inspections and to suggest installations which will make for good physical conditions. This includes medical work, both to arrest the development of com municable diseases and to care for ac-cident cases, and the planning and in-stallation of lunch rooms, so as to insure nourishing meal each day adequate rest, proper water supply, and recreation are among the necessities for health which may be controlled, at least health which may be controlled, at least partly, by the employer."

Countless demands for advice and practical aids resulted from the circula-ation of Mr. Easley's etter, and the work of the welfare department grew to such proportions that it was necessary to form special committee to concentrate effort upon it. This joint committee on welfare work for munition factory employees is composed of some of the most prominent men and women in this

Among the members of the committee is Mrs. John Astor, whose son, Mr. Vincent Astor, is an officer of the National Civic Federation. Mrs. Astor is a most active worker, and her aid promises valuable results in Europe, where it is expected that she will establish points of contact that she will establish points of contact for the welfare department. This will undoubtedly result in the extension of the influence and aid of the department to foreign countries. If Mrs. Astor finds that European employers will welcome improvements, the department will send over experts to assist in improving conditions for the foreign women workers who tions for the foreign women workers, who have so largely replaced men in the muni-

WOMEN'S WORK IN MUNITION PLANTS

Many English women of the leisure class are working to help supply the needs of the English army, and report for this work at six in the morning, seven days a week, along with thousands of their poorer sisters. They are locked in the factory, where they stand over their work for eight hours a day. As all these women, rich or poor, work at a high nervous tension during the entire time, they surely need all the aid that experience finds practical.

Mrs. Astor carried with her to England letters of introduction addressed to officials of the English factory inspection department, which had already asked for department, which had already asked for assistance from the welfare department, and also to two leading labor men in London, Mr. W. C. Bowerman, secretary of the Parliamentary committee of the British Trade Union Congress, and Mr. W. A. Appleton, general secretary of the General Federation of Trade Unions. Nothing could better prove the seriousness of the work Mrs. Astar so generales had to the country of the country of the country of the seriousness. of the work Mrs. Astor so generously has agreed to undertake than the practical and efficient character of these documents.

ABOUT THE DEPARTMENT

Just a word as to the welfare department of the National City Federation, which was so well prepared that it could quickly and effectively mobilize its forces to relieve conditions in the munition factories of the nations at war, as well as of those at peace. The welfare department is equipped to render instant service to the employees of munition factories or, indeed, factories of any kind, as well as to those of stores, mines, railways, and public institutions. An example of their great efficiency follows. A comparaas to those of stores, finnes, railways, and public institutions. An example of their great efficiency follows. A comparatively small town in this country, on account of its big munition plant, had thrust upon it many thousand new residents, for the large explore of when this country of the large explores of the store of the sto upon it many thousand new residents, for a large number of whom living accommodations could not be provided. The munition factory immediately sent its architect and its industrial secretary to consult with the welfare department. And here are some of the results: domitories are being built, each to accommodate over one hundred eils and dormitories are being built, each to ac-commodate over one hundred girls, and each having a matron and attendants. Special provision will be made for at-tractive outside dining-halls, where the young woman may have the privilege of entertaining and of dancing in the evenings. For the families, of whom in this instance there as about it thousand this instance there are about six thousand new ones, there are being built a number of houses where light, furnace heat, and other accommodations will be provided. Rents are to be small. Recreation and social halls and all the modern pro ressive devices for community life are being creative. ated. Even hospitals are being established.

SUBJECTS AND OFFICERS

The welfare department covers such subjects as sanitation, recreation, voca-tional training, kindergartens, libraries, and provident funds, which include insurance, compensation, sick, accident, and death funds, pensions, and employers'

surance, compensation, sick, accident, and death funds, pensions, and employers' plans for saving with interest or for lending money in times of necessity.

Miss Gertrude Beeks is the able director of the welfare department, and Mr. Louis A. Coolidge, a large employer of labor, is its chairman.

A large number of distinguished men and women are closely identified with the National Civic Federation, including Mr. Seth Low, Prof. Benjamin Ide Wheeler, Mr. Isaac N. Seligman, Mr. John Hays Hammond, Mr. August Belmont, Mr. Emerson McMillin, Mr. George W. Perkins, Mr. Vincent Astor, Mr. William R. Wilcox. The two hats sketched at the top of The two nats sketched at the top of page 73 are from the Mary Greenaway Shop in Boston. The avowed object of this shop is to supply each patron with hats that are really becoming to her personality and type. At the upper left is a tiny hat of soft maroon milan straw, edged with black ostrich feather fringe. Gaily colored little flowers top-the fringe. In the upper right-hand corner is a most picturesque garden hat of coarse leghorn, with a flat trimming of pansies in various shades of violet.

The youthful suit sketched in the lower left-hand corner of page 74 would be smart in a buckskin covert of the new shade of Joffre blue, banded with cloth of a darker shade of blue; or it may be made a darker shade of blue; or it may be made in battleship gray covert or tricoserge, banded with either suède or cloth in a darker color and trimmed with white bone buttons. The gown in the middle at the top of page 77 is the only one for formal afternoon wear shown with this article; it is the kind of dress which no woman can afford to be without. It is as smart as such a gown may be, and yet it is not diffi-cult to make nor is it so startling to wear cuit to make nor is it so startling to wear as to make one conspicuous. It would be very charming if made in grenat taffeta, a color varying between red and leather brown. The ruchings are of the same material as the dress and there are selfmaterial as the dress and there are sent colored stitchings up the skirt. The but-tons are covered with the material. A well-known house will supply this gown to Vogue readers for $75. It may be made by a less-known dressmaker for $50, or, if one supplies her own materials, for $20.

At the lower left on page 77 is illustrated an evening gown made after the charming Watteau styles. It conveys an old world quaintness in its flowered skirt and basque-like bodice. The neck is outlined with a narrow band of cream colored lace to match the lace on the sleeves. This gown can be made for $32.50, including the materials.

An evening gown from Tafel is illustrated at the lower right on page 77; it is made of pink soirée silk (which is a kind of taffeta). The underskirt is of blue tulle over silver lace, beneath which is a blue china silk petiticoat. The bertha is of silver lace. A piquant touch of color is brought into this gown by pastel blue embroidery on the point of the bodice, by the cross strings of the same color over the shoulder, and by the puffs of the same colored ribbon in the pannier. This type of gown is not extremely difficult to make and is one of the smartest models for evening wear that the present mode affords. The skill with which Raffaëlli seizes and portrays the spirit, the distinctive personality of a place, is evidenced in "Le Canal Mysterieux," painted during a sojourn in Venice

A FRENCH PAINTER of the PERSONALITY of CITIES

THE veteran French painter, Jean François Raffaëlli, is too well known in America, both personally and for his work, to require any introduction. He has exhibted many of his paintings in various cities of the United States, and as he has often accompanied his exhibitions, he has become widely known among American connoisseurs; his personal charm and his able and delightful presentation of his art theories have combined to place him among the well-known and equally well-beloved of the French painters who have visited our country.

The art of Raffaelli stands, and will live, by reason of its own distinctive merits, among which are sincerity and a wholly personal point of view. It is this artist who has immortalized a thousand nooks and corners of Paris by reproducing them on canvas. Scenes along the quais, street corners in the mist and shadows of a pale gray day, an ancient piece of architecture at the turn of some narrow street, the push-cart woman with her bunches of fragrant violets—these and hundreds of other quiet scenes Raffaelli has fixed indelibly in the soft and quiet tones in which he works. Some day, these will be not only a wealth of beauty but a priceless collection of documents on the Paris of the twentieth century, precious to the French people and to all who know and love the Paris of to-day, even as the etchings of Meryon are beloved of those who love the Paris of former days. Raffaelli, however, does not confine his genius to the single field of Paris. At times he wanders far afield, away to the storm-beaten coast of Brittany or among the sunnier and not less beguiling scenes of Venice. He is a prodigious worker, and turns out an immense number of paintings with what seems the greatest ease. In a single winter in Venice, even though he may go there ostensibly for his health and to take a little rest, he will paint no less than half a hundred scenes, and make, besides these, innumerable sketches.

The technique of Raffaëlli is an unusual one, so much so that he is frequently accused of painting with his palete knife or with the wooden end of his brushes, rather than in the accepted manner of artists in oil. This technique, however, appears always a conviction, never a matter of pose, and it never becomes the dominant element in his work.

Two photographs by Em. Crevaux, Paris

Though Raffaëlli is best known for his paintings of picturesque corners of his beloved Paris, he spends occasional winters in Venice, and "San Crovaso" is a memento of one of them

The Soul of a Tired Business Man

"I read Collier's because it is balanced to suit the needs of the average tired business man. There is some fiction which is good, there are some timely articles which during the past year have been positively gripping and the editorials contain just the proper amount of clean philosophy and good humor to keep the doors of one's soul pleasantly ajar to the better things of life."-F. VOGUE—THE SHORT CUT to New York's Shopping Districts

The busy matron who reads the pages of Vogue will find that Vogue leads right past all the shops of bustling New York. Vogue has a corps of busy workers at her beck and call, waiting to discharge a thousand and one tedious errands that clamor for prompt attention.

The way is open every day, every week, every season of the year. Not only during the holidays, but now, in the spring and summer months the can perform some task of real importance for you. This short cut starts at the four corners of the earth, leading straight to the heart of New York. The traveller's starting point has nothing to do with the case.

Wherever you live and are,—the next time you find yourself about to leave the house for a long, arduous shopping tour, take off your rubbers, pick up your pen, and try the short cut. Write to Vogue. Say, "I saw just the thing I need on page so and so of such and such an issue—please buy it for me." Send a cheque to cover its cost price and postage. If it has to go by express, we'll send it collect. Some shops may even deliver it free of charge.

Anyway, there's no fee for our part of it.

A Change of Bill Every Week!

An overture of verse, timely, tripping, trenchant—

A chorus of color, iridescent, lustrous

A team of jugglers to toss our foibles high in the air and catch them, as they tumble about us, in a blanket of laughter—

A domestic mise en scene sweetened with enough folly to lighten the burden of living—

A swordsman to prick with the swift rapier of ridicule the ever-present bubble of bunk -

A skit in which the fads, fakes and fallacies of the day are stripped of sham and pretence and exposed to the spot-light of truth—

A leaven of politics, a swift survey of the Seven Arts, an aria of unadulterated joy—

America's Cleverest Weekly

Edited for the man—and the gentler members of his family—whose perspective is sufficiently far above the dead level of dulness to appreciate the smarter currents of American life.

RIGHT OF WAY

THE man who drives a Packard Twin-Six owns the road. His car is the accepted gauge of ability and value. Its twelve-cylinder motor is the master of any situation, whether that situation demand sustained racing speed, downright exertion, or the smoothest, softest action. In the service of more than 4,000 owners it has shattered all traditions of automobile sufficiency.

The Packard Twin-Six engine was a logical development by a company that for seventeen years has been the recognized leader of automobile progress. Now it has the clinching endorsement of the most exacting clientele in the world.

The Packard Motor Car Company repeats with greater emphasis than ever before:

"Ask the man who owns one"

The "1-25"—Wheelbase 125 Inches.
The "1-35"—Wheelbase 135 Inches.
